BEGONIAS.

We desire to call the attention of prospective buyers to Begonia Lorraine, Begonia Lonsdale, Begonia Norwood and Begonia Cincinnati. Begonias have been one of our specialties for years. This year we are growing more Begonias than ever before, being the largest Begonia Growers in the world of the above varieties.

This branch of our business has been built up on the quality of the goods we have delivered to our many customers. We never lose a Begonia buyer the second year. We establish ourselves so strongly with him on his first purchase that naturally he falls in line each succeeding year. We desire that each and every Begonia grower send us his order, or at least a share of it, for comparison sake. Don't delay. Orders booked now will be delivered in June. All plants to be twice shifted and shipped from 2½-inch pots. All of the very highest quality.

BEGONIA NORWOOD.

We are also disseminating this year the new dark sport of Begonia Lonsdale, which will positively hold its flowers longer than any variety known to us. The flowers will die right on the plant. Plants that flowered as early as October 15th are still in full bloom. It will be the ideal variety in 4, 5 and 6-inch pots for fine hamper work.

Prices of these varieties, from 2½-inch pots, twice shifted:

Begonia Norwood, $20.00 per 100; $175.00 per 1000.
Begonia Lorraine, $15.00 per 100; $140.00 per 1000.
Begonia Lonsdale, Light Sport, $15.00 per 100; $140.00 per 1000.
Begonia Glory of Cincinnati, $25.00 per 100; $200.00 per 1000.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., E. L. Page, Greene, N. Y.; First Vice-pres., L. H. Vaughan, Chicago; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. Twenty-ninth annual meeting, June 20 to 22, 1911.

ORLO NICHOLS has opened a seed store at Balfour, N. D.

FRANK GRIFFEL, with the Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis., and Miss Caroline Johnson were married March 13.

SEEDSMEN consider that they are harassed by legislation—but they can thank their lucky stars that they are not in the nursery business.

THOMAS THYNE, the oldest seedsman at Dundee, Scotland, is dead. He was 75 years of age and had been in the seed trade sixty-two years.

J. W. JUNG, of the J. W. Jung Seed Co., Randolph, Wis., says business has been good from the start of the season and he expects to round up a total three times as great as in the season of 1910.

WAS March 20 big Monday this year or will it be March 27? Last week there was so much cold weather all over the country that a good many catalogue houses think next Monday likely to bring more mail orders than last Monday brought.

IN consequence of the recent death of two partners in the well known English firm of H. Cannell & Sons, Swanley, R. W. Cannell has been appointed receiver of the business and has taken possession of the assets. It is anticipated that the business will pay all claims in full and leave a substantial surplus for the partners.

THE mail order trade is now on the down grade, with counter trade heavy in the warmer sections, but only just beginning in most sections. The catalogues have brought no unusual response thus far this year, but favorable weather the next few weeks will do much to improve the record. The seed trade hopes for a long season for garden making.

CABBAGE IN WASHINGTON.

Everything is looking fine in the Pacific northwest. Writing under date of March 14, Mr. Leckenby, of the Chas. H. Lilly Co., Seattle, said: "Cabbage passed through the winter in good shape and I do not look for any setback from now on. The only trouble is that there is a smaller acreage than usual to harvest in 1911."

CALIFORNIA SEED CROPS.

L. W. Wheeler, of the Pieters-Wheeler Seed Co., Hollister, Cal., does not believe that irreparable damage has been done to seed crops by the excessive rains, though all crops must necessarily be late. March 15 he said:

"During the early winter, prior to January 10, we had no rain and found it nearly impossible to make the ground ready for planting. After the rains finally commenced we received considerably too much in a short period. In consequence, a large acreage of seed crops is yet unplanted, which should have been in before January 1. We were fortunate enough to complete all the planting on our own ranch before the last heavy rain, which has done considerable damage, we understand, in some of the other seed growing sections of the state, although we received no injurious effects. Over six and one-half inches of rain fell in forty-eight hours in one of the valleys where seed is grown. We believe all crops will be late and some of the items will probably be short, but unless we have exceptionally late spring rains, which have not obtained for the last few years, we do not look for any great shortage. We think, however, that rad-

THE CALIFORNIA STORM.

Of the storm in the seed growing section of California M. W. Williams, secretary and general manager of the Braslan Seed Growers' Co., San Jose, wrote as follows March 16:

"California has experienced a most severe storm. We have had this season over twice as much rain as last year and all of this rainfall came in two months instead of being spread through the months of October, November and December. This, of course, made an excessive amount of water, which has flooded many districts. There is no question but what the onion seed crops will suffer by this excessive moisture. There will be considerable acreage drowned out and that which still remains will be so thoroughly water-soaked that a large percentage of onions will rot. It is impossible at this writing to tell the exact damage, but we will be glad to advise you further as soon as we know definitely something to report."

CANADA'S SEED IMPORTS.

Freed from duty and under the stimulus which agriculture in the Dominion is likely to receive with the unhampered admission to the United States of farm products, American seeds and bulbous roots will be in great demand in the Canadian provinces. The principal imports in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1910, in this line were: Mangolds and beet, $44,241; carrots, $9,421; grass and clover, $855,440; other field and garden seeds, $291,613; mustard, $21,761; rape seed, $9,407; turnip seed, $10,867.

SPRING IN HOLLAND.

It has previously been reported in this column that the Holland bulb growers were getting along without a winter between their seasons. Last year there was practically no winter and again this season climatic conditions have been such that there was scarcely any stop to the growth of vegetation. March opened with a spring rain that brought the bulbs to life as if by magic and the last of the winter covering was whisked away. The winter season was dry, so that the rains have done no harm and growth started considerably earlier than usual. Should there be no severe late frosts, the blooming season will be here before April arrives; April 1 is likely to find the bulb fields in the height of their glory and Easter most likely will see the greater part of the flowers at least past their best.

The bulb growers have been shipping gladiolus bulbs in greater quantities than ever before and the close of the season is likely to find the stocks well cleaned up.

SOUTH TEXAS THE GARDEN.

The South Texas Truck Growers' Association, which does the marketing for the Bermuda onion growers of the Mission section as well as for those of the other parts of south Texas, has issued a report showing that last season the acreage of that product in the neighborhood of Mission was 135 acres, which yielded 61,985 crates. The crop on the 135 acres netted the growers a total of $73,560.41, or a little more than $541 per acre. On practically all of this 135 acres on which onions were grown, one or two additional crops of other kinds were harvested during the year, thus, according to the association management, bringing up the net revenue from the land to more than $650 per acre per annum. It is claimed that this record is not exceeded in any agricultural district in the United States.

FERTILIZERS FOR FLORISTS.

manure, on the other hand, is a warm manure, fermenting rapidly and giving a high temperature, which is injurious to plant growth.

Sheep manure is used in a dry state and is somewhat stronger than cow manure. It also heats on fermenting and so caution should be observed in its use. It should, then, be used in much smaller quantities than decayed manures.

Hen manure is a highly nitrogenous manure and should be used in extremely small quantities.

Cattle manure is now put upon the market in a dry form and is much used for mulching purposes. It should be kept

We are sales agents for a large French export grower and a big Holland grower; both have been selling customers in the United States over 15 years. We import bulbs from no other source and last year returned late orders they could not fill. Being ourselves large forcers of Bulbs and having imported for over 20 years, we know from experience the only safe plan to get good bulbs is to buy only of growers who send out good stock.

HOME GROWN BULBS—We offer Emperor, Southern Queen, Lady Alba, Ornatus, Barri Conspicuus. We have other kinds but none good enough to force.

Send 6 cents for postage on 80-page catalogue and prices of bulbs.

TERMS:

Accounts due at Easter 1912, except French shipments due in 90 days. Unknown customers must give local bank, and trade references. Liberal discount for cash before shipment or after receipt of bulbs. with it. This makes it stronger and so it should be applied in smaller quantities.

Commercial Fertilizers.

Commercial fertilizers, or chemical fertilizers, as they are also called, are used merely to supply nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium, and so naturally fall into three groups. Of those bearing nitrogen there are several of importance in greenhouse work. Dried blood, which should contain fourteen to fifteen per cent of nitrogen, is insoluble and so must decompose before the nitrogen is available. This makes a good form both for incorporating with the soil and also for a mulch.

Sodium nitrate is the only nitrogen salt that can be used in solution, as all the other soluble salts of nitrogen become fixed as soon as they come in contact with the soil. However, they become available in a short time. The released sodium may correct soil acidity or may liberate calcium, potassium or magnesium from the soil. Care must be exercised in the use of sodium, as it deflocculates the soil, leaving behind the carbonate of soda. When this happens, the clay soils are likely to become sour.

Ammonia salts increase the amount of lime removed from the soil. The sulphates and chlorides act as acids and the soil finally becomes sour. This is partly caused by molds using the nitrogen and setting the acids free. As nitrogen can only be taken into the plant in the form of the nitrate, these compounds must be converted into nitrates before being available. Bacteria play an important part in this conversion. Ammonium sulphate is the more useful of the two, owing to its greater abundance and lower cost.

Phosphorus and Potassium.

Phosphorus may be secured from several sources. Steamed bone carries from twelve to fourteen per cent of phosphorus. It should be well steamed and finely ground. The steaming removes most of the nitrogen, which is in the form of fats. The organic structure of the bone is also destroyed, making it soft and so reducing it to a finer state of division. The more finely ground, the larger the surface exposed to the agencies of decay, and so the sooner it will give up its phosphorus.

Natural rock phosphate is not readily enough available for greenhouse crops, and so should not be used unless mixed in the compost heap, where it is made available by the fermentation. When used in this way, it should be quite efficient and has the advantage of not being injurious when used in large quantities.

Acid phosphate, which is the natural rock treated with acid, is likely to be corrosive and injure plants unless mixed with the soil several days before planting.

All phosphorous fertilizers should be added to the soil before planting.

Potassium salts in the form of the sulphates and chlorides may also deflocculate the soil. Potassium sulphate is perhaps the best of the potassium salts to use. Kainit is a mixture of soluble salts of potassium, magnesium and sodium as it is mined. Considering the potassium only, it is one-fourth as strong as commercial potassium sulphate. Wood ash is another source of potassium, but, to be of value, it must contain at least five per cent of potassium. Wood ash also contains large quantities of lime.

Probably the best forms of commercial fertilizers for greenhouse work are dried blood, ammonium sulphate and sodium or their scarcity makes their use prohibitive.

The Action of Lime.

To the list of commercial fertilizers should be added one other, namely, lime. While this substance adds but little directly to the nutritive substances of the soil, it does much to improve the physical condition of the soil and helps to make other forms more readily available.

Lime influences the soil under three different heads. First, it affects its mechanical condition by causing flocculation, as in the case of heavy soils. The soil is thus made more open. It also helps to bind sandy soils. Second, it affects its chemical composition by ridding it of many acids formed by the decay of organic manure, or, in other words, keeps it sweet. It renders other plant foods available. It supplies needed plant food. Third, it affects its biological conditions by favoring bacterial growth and affecting insects and fungous growths.

Lime may be used in the form of air-slaked lime, ground lime, stone and marl. Air-slaked lime differs little from ground limestone, except in the fact that it is separated into smaller particles. Fresh lime should never be used, on account of its caustic properties. Ground limestone is perhaps the best, as it can be applied in quantity without injury to the plants.

It must always be kept in mind that commercial fertilizers are so much stronger than natural manures that great caution must be observed in their use. It is hard to realize that an exceedingly small amount of commercial fertilizer may be equal in fertilizing value to a large quantity of natural manure.

With the increasing scarcity of natural manures, there is no doubt that commercial fertilizers will have to replace them in part. Experiments being carried on at the present time will, without doubt, show that just as good flowers and plants can be grown with chemical fertilizers, when supplemented by a small quantity of natural manures, as when grown with natural manures alone. H. B. Dorner.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—The H. A. Fisher Co., at present located on West South street, has leased the store at 110 West Main street and will remove to it as soon as the work of remodeling it is completed. The firm expects to make the new establishment one of the finest of its kind in southern Michigan.

You can just as well buy your French bulbs from the most reliable source of supply as not, because they don't cost any more money and they will average better returns than most bulbs of various brands on the market. The house of Bremond in Ollioules, France, is the home of the French bulb industry. The standard of quality maintained for so many years is marvelous, considering the various seasons and conditions at times to be contended with.

If you knew what care is taken by Mr. Bremond to assure his clients of superior quality, you would never buy other brands. The Horseshoe Brand in French bulbs are Bremond's goods and are from the choicest fields in France.

The Market.

Business conditions are about the same as last reported. Stock is becoming more plentiful, especially the bulbous varieties, and there is therefore a slight decline in prices. Daffodils are in bloom in the yards; they are rather short, but serve the purpose for table work. Tulips and hyacinths are the principal potted plants and move well.

Carnations are in greater volume, but are not a surplus. Callas and Easter lilies are about the same. The last few weeks of sunny, spring weather have started outside planting quite extensively, therefore the nurserymen are experiencing an unusually busy season.

St. Patrick's day created a demand, confined principally to green carnations and potted shamrocks, and appropriate window displays were noticeable on all sides.

Various Notes.

The Heilig Flower Shop is the latest. It was recently opened by R. L. Scott in the Heilig theater building, and although somewhat small, it is quite unique in appearance and caters to the best class of trade. J. A. Davis is in charge.

E. R. C.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

After several months of hard fighting, we have finally been able to get the weather regulated so as to have some sunshine instead of nothing but rain, and we shall probably be able to do some business in consequence. Flowers of all kinds have shown a decided tendency to get lower in price and we can look for further reductions soon all along the line. Carnations, which have been held at 3 and 4 cents for the last month and even longer, can now be had for about one-half those figures, and roses are now being offered to the stores at from 50 cents to 75 cents per dozen, which is a reduction in about the same proportion.

Easter lilies, from present indications, will be in ample supply for some time to come. They cost the retailers from $2 to $4 per dozen. Violets are begging at any price. The street hucksters have lowered the price to 5 cents a bunch, which is cheaper than they have ever been sold before, even on the sidewalks. Daffodils, except the later blooming varieties, are not so plentiful as they have been and the same can be said of tulips, snowdrops and freesias. Wild flowers of many kinds help to keep up the show and fruit blossoms are now at the top of their season.

Various Notes.

The next meeting of the Pacific Coast Horticultural Society will be held in Red Men's hall, on the evening of March 25. This is made necessary because the spring bulb show will take place on the regular meeting night, which would be one week later.

Louis F. Scribner, of Pasadena, passed through town on his way home from Sebastopol, Cal., where he has extensive nursery interests.

TOMATOES TO FOLLOW VIOLETS.

I intend to follow violets with Comet tomatoes. What temperature, day and night, suits them best? Should they be trained to a single stem? I shall appreciate any cultural instructions you can give me. E. A. P.

Tomatoes make an excellent crop to follow violets with, and you could have no better variety than Comet. The violet soil should receive a liberal coating of rotted cow manure and this should be well spaded in. In midwinter tomatoes need a quite restricted root run, but it is otherwise now, with lengthening days and the steadily increasing heat of the sun. If you have narrow, old-fashioned houses, train the plants up the roof. If the houses are wide and your violets are grown on the ground, they are best trained upright and to single stems. They can be set quite closely; sixteen to eighteen inches apart each way suffices. Some set them even closer than this. I prefer to allow twenty-four inches between the rows and run the plants rather close in the rows. They can be supported by brown twine strung to overhead galvanized wires.

A night temperature as near 62 degrees as possible, increasing to 65 degrees later, suits tomatoes. If you prefer to grow them without fire heat they will grow, but will fruit later. They at all times want a dry atmosphere, the exact opposite of that for cucumbers. No artificial pollination will be necessary. Removal of the side laterals must be attended to every few days and, if the plants are pinched after setting five bunches, you are assured of a good crop. All the attention after this consists in removing side shoots and giving the plants a good water supply. When the plants are heavily set, soakings of liquid manure once a week will be found beneficial. The day temperature at this season can run up to 75 degrees with sun; without sun, 70 degrees is a sufficient maximum. Later in the season these temperatures can be increased, of course. Never keep the house close. A free circulation of air assists in setting the fruit and makes the plants more stocky. Never syringe the plants. For white fly, gas fumigation is the only remedy. C. W.

FOR A SUMMER CROP.

We operate vegetable greenhouses and are wondering whether there is not something profitable for us to grow in our houses, in the florists' line, during the summer months, when our beds are idle in the houses. Any pointers will be appreciated. We are close to Indianapolis and to three cities of about 10,000 inhabitants. We are also in touch with Cincinnati, though a little farther away from it. We would want to sell the product at wholesale. The houses would be idle about July 1. S. A. M.

Chrysanthemums are the only crop of cut flowers that could be grown under the conditions described, and several vegetable growers use them in that way. First of all, you must have fine, healthy plants of the best early varieties. These would have to be purchased, or grown in a separate house where proper conditions are possible. This other house would also be needed to start the lettuce plants in later in the season, when the mums are nearly all cut and sold, so as to have fine, large lettuce plants ready to transplant into the beds as soon as the last mums are cut.

If you have never grown chrysanthemums, it would probably be better to buy the plants in June from one of the most reliable dealers. Use only two or three varieties and no culls left over from what someone has not needed to fill his own beds. Good, healthy plants, kept that way, are necessary to success with mums. H. G.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Officers for 1910-11: Pres., W. P. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; Vice-pres., E. S. Welch, Shenandoah, Ia.; Sec'y, John Hall Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-sixth annual meeting, St. Louis, June, 1911.

THE trade is looking forward to a big gathering of nurserymen at St. Louis in June.

JOHN A. PEYTON, of Louisiana, Mo., becomes a partner in the Boonville Nurseries, Boonville, Mo., April 1.

NORTHWESTERN nurserymen say that demand never was so good as now, and that supply never was lighter, relatively speaking.

THE spring season is opening with every prospect that, given favorable weather conditions, a banner business will be done.

It is said that George R. Murray, the nurseryman of Oregon, Mo., has received 2,000 scions of the Delicious apple, to be grafted on young stock in his orchards.

D. G. WIEGAND BRUSS, Boskoop, who is well known in this country through his many trips here, now is treasurer of the Protective Association of Holland Nurserymen.

MR. J. VAN LEEUWEN, proprietor of the Continental Nurseries, in Franklin, Mass., has purchased the Slade greenhouses, on Central street, Franklin, from William Doel, of Pascoag, R. I.

WALTER BARTH, formerly gardener on the estate of Samuel Untermyer, Yonkers, N. Y., has bought a farm of 130 acres at Great Barrington, Mass., and will start in business as the Green River Nursery Co.

SOME idea of the activity this season in the line of small fruits may perhaps be gathered from the fact that J. F. Cathcart & Sons, of Bristol, Ind., recently received an order from Illinois for 100,000 strawberry plants, said to be the largest order of the kind ever received by Bristol nurserymen.

WHEN August Rolker & Sons, New York, were sustained in their protest at the assessment of duty on Rosa rugosa it cut their duty from $100 to $2.50, for the importation in question consisted of 2,500 plants. Rolker & Sons say their case was won largely because of the work done by F. W. Kelsey & Co., whose successful protest under the former tariff law, as reported in The Review of March 16, was the basis of the present decision.

COLD STORAGE.

At the recent meeting of the Tennessee Nurserymen's Association R. C.
Chase, of Huntsville, Ala., talked on "Cold Storage of Nursery Stock." Mr.
Chase said the practice which they had found to work most successfully was to pack the trees in paper-lined boxes and put them in cold storage, the temperature of which was kept as near 34 degrees as possible. He said that cold storage should be as good as heeling out trees. They had found it of the greatest advantage and recommended its use to the members of the association. Following in discussion, W. P.
Stark, of Louisiana, Mo., said that cold storage for nursery stock is as necessary as for fruit. It made it possible to do continuous shipping from October to May. They had had a considerable experience and in all cases stock had come out in good shape. S. W. Crowell, of Roseacres, Miss., said that with roses they had found cold storage an important feature in their work.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

The feature of last week was a tremendous glut of all kinds of cut stock. Roses are abundant, and while good flowers sell fairly well, large numbers are sold extremely low and street fakers are now able to secure an abundance of stock at their own prices. Killarney and White Killarney are the real leaders.

Carnations are especially numerous and prices have sunk to a low ebb, although the quality is exceptionally good. The southern jonquils have arrived and can be seen in every nook and corner; one dealer had 30,000 last Saturday and sold them at 6 cents per dozen. Violets are not coming in such large quantities and will soon be over, especially those grown inside; in fact, some growers have already taken them out to make room for Easter stock.

Sweet peas are beginning to wane; the stems are exceedingly short and good stock is hard to get. Harrisii and callas are both plentiful and lower in price. Bulbous stock is plentiful indeed, and only the best can be moved. Miniature hyacinths are hard to move this season; some pans with five or six bulbs are sold for 25 cents. Extra fine single and double tulips are to be had in all shades.

Various Notes.

At the annual election of officers of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, March 13, the following were chosen for the ensuing year: Robert L. Graham, president; Wm. Christie, vice-president; N. F. Flitton, secretary; Geo. Talbott, financial secretary; Fred G. Burger, treasurer, and Chas. M. Wagner, librarian. After the election the members went to the Hotel Raleigh, where an enjoyable banquet was given. Certificates of merit were awarded to Wm. Kleinheinz, of Ogontz, Pa., for a vase of seedling red carnations; to Henry Eichholz, of Waynesboro, Pa., for a vase of red carnations, and to G. A. Lotze, of Glenburnie, Md., for a vase of white carnations named John J. Perry.

On Monday, March 20, R. A. Vincent entertained the distinguished English horticulturists and also the members of the club at his residence at Cowenton.

Fred Bauer, of Govanstown, has donated a handsome silver cup to be used as a bowling prize at the S. A. F. convention next August. Q.

Carnations

WHITE HOUSE. The quality white. Won the Silver Cup at Morristown for best undisseminated variety; Bronze Medal at Pittsburg, and five other certificates. Absolutely non-bursting, clean and kind in growth and a variety that will make good. We have 10,000 for March delivery and that is all we will be in a position to supply of this variety.

PRINCESS CHARMING. The finest thing in sight in the Enchantress shade of pink. Every bud a perfect flower and your net returns per square foot will surprise you.

Our stock is limited, but we are still in a position to supply first-class, rooted cuttings of both these varieties at $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Chrysanthemums

We catalogue over 500 varieties and surely we have the kind you want.

The Market.

Every one reports business as good during the last week. Flowers are now in good supply, with the demand also good. Carnations retail at 60 cents and 75 cents per dozen and roses at $1 and $1.50 per dozen; these are quite plentiful. Violets sell at $1 per hundred blooms, sweet peas at $1 and $1.50 per hundred, and callas at $2 per dozen. Bulb stock is quite plentiful. Paper Whites, tulips and daffodils retail at 50 cents per dozen, double Murillo tulips at 75 cents per dozen, and snapdragons at 75 cents and $1 per dozen.

Plant trade in good. Pans of hyacinths, tulips and daffodils and pots of azaleas, cyclamens and primroses sell well. Shamrocks were in fair demand.

On Wednesday, March 15, there was a severe cold spell here.

Various Notes.

E. H. Chamberlain had the decorations for the Dartmouth Club banquet at the Parker House last week. He used lots of palms, potted plants and flowers.

Wm. P. Peirce had some nice shamrocks in pots.

A. B. Hathaway is cutting some excellent daffodils; the varieties are Emperor, Victoria, Princeps and Golden Spur.

H. V. Sowle is cutting nice bulb stock. The fakers were selling carnations on Saturday, March 18, at 25 cents per dozen.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Last week was good, both as to supply of stock and the demand. Killarney roses are fine and white roses are not so hard to get as they have been. American Beauties are still scarce, as are also good Richmond. Carnations are plentiful, but move well. Valley and violets are moving slowly. Bulbous stock is in good demand and there is a fair call for flowering plants. Adiantum continues plentiful and of good quality. Asparagus plumosus is not of the black variety we have had to put up with for several weeks.

Various Notes.

A team of Alliance florists came to Cleveland March 18 and beat the locals by a narrow margin. H. P. Knoble bowled the highest score, making 232. After the match the Alliance men were entertained at the Bismarck. The visitors remained in Cleveland over Sunday, visiting the plants of the Cleveland Cut Flower Co. and the J. M. Gasser Co.

The Cleveland Florists' Club will hold a dancing party shortly after Easter.

Ben Feldner, of the Roseville Potteries, was in town this week.

Several of the Cleveland florists and their wives leave for Boston March 24.

March 13 several of the florists entertained their ladies at the club rooms. The ladies, forming the Cherry Pickers, won three games out of four from the High Rollers, the men, at bowling.

Worcester, Mass.—At the first spring show of the Worcester County Horticultural Society, held in Horticultural hall, numerous prizes were won by H. F. A. Lange; by L. C. Midgley, of the Worcester Conservatories, and by Edward W. Breed, of Clinton, Mass. Special prizes were awarded to Mr. Lange for valley, roses, potted plants, tulips, hyacinths and narcissi, and to Mr. Breed for schizanthus.

Carnation Norwood

This variety has been grown by us for four years and has proven to be the best White Carnation we have ever grown.

NORWOOD is a Pure White, of good form, about 3½ inches in diameter, exceedingly fragrant, never known to split, and a free and continuous bloomer. The most profitable Carnation we have ever grown. An ideal commercial variety. Rooted cuttings (immediate delivery), $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000.

It will pay every Carnation Grower to plant this variety—there's money in it.

PENNSYLVANIA Pink Boston Market

A seedling of Boston Market and Harlowarden that has been under test for the past five years and which has shown up so well under all conditions that I now feel confident it is one of the best commercial varieties and have pleasure in offering it for the first time for spring delivery 1911.
The color is a shade lighter pink than Lawson; form high built, much like Boston Market; stem long and graceful; healthy grower; blooms freely from November all through the season.
This new variety I am confident will prove a money-maker—a pink Boston Market—only much larger and better and destined to be one of the most popular commercial varieties.
Come and see it growing. I guarantee same to be in perfect health. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

The lenten season has its effects upon the disposal of the regular stock of cut flowers the retailers are carrying, as well as on the great quantities of flowering plants, such as azaleas, hydrangeas, rhododendrons, spiraeas, lilies, etc. The different nurseries growing these plants, as well as the stores, are more or less overstocked and it is doubtful if by Easter the same beautiful plants as one sees now can be produced, on account of the lateness of the season and the continued warm weather. Although the killing frost in January did enough damage to the private gardens all over the city and in the country towns to justify a big demand for all kinds of outdoor plants, the sales up to now have not come up to the expectations of the growers, who have an enormous and first-class stock on hand. Iris Hispanica is seen in bloom everywhere and Lilium giganteum and Harrisii planted outdoors early are showing advanced buds; some of them are beginning to bloom and by Easter thousands of flowers will be ready to cut. Sweet peas are not up to the usual standard; the flowers are good, but the stems are too short. Snapdragons grown under glass are producing good flower spikes, but outdoor stock is entirely too late and weak in the stem; the first plants of the latter were killed in January. On account of the extremely warm and dry weather, the outdoor roses, which are, as a rule, by this time of the year perfect in flower and stem, are only fit for cheap work. Today we have the first rain for seven weeks and a great deal more is needed to improve the outdoor vegetation in general.

Club Meeting.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society held its regular monthly meeting March 16, at Kolb's German Tavern. The attendance was fair. P. A. Chopin presided in the absence of Richard Eichling, who was out of town. The meeting was made interesting through the lecture of J. A. Newsham, our local orchid specialist, on "Orchids for Commercial Purposes." Mr. Newsham referred to the large increase in the demand for orchids in general, especially of other varieties than cattleyas, all over the country. Of these he reported a large demand for Oncidium splendidum, having shipped 1,000 plants to a large grower for the New York market. The lecturer's son, Dan, is expected to arrive this week from a two months' trip through Central America. Dan Newsham is only 16 years of age and this is his second successful journey through the wilds of Central America in search of commercial orchids.

At the next meeting, in April, a lecture will be delivered by P. A. Chopin.

J. A. Newsham exhibited some beautiful clusters of Dendrobium thyrsiflorum and D. crepidatum. Metairie Ridge Nursery Co. showed a nice collection of well grown young roses. R. E.

Your Carnation Trade Wants "Dorothy Gordon"

Some new carnations look good when they first come out, but fail to measure up to their promise and the claims of the disseminator.

In this connection, you can profitably remember that Carnation "Dorothy Gordon" has been tried and proved, and is still making good. Its merits were well known to us before we advertised a single cutting for sale, and the trade has had ample time since to get fully acquainted with this variety. As a result "Dorothy Gordon" is making money for more florists this winter than ever.

With its large flowers of uniform flesh pink; its long, stiff stems and unusually fine lasting qualities, "Dorothy Gordon" has won the favor of florists whose customers demand the best and are ready to pay for it. The flowers bring a higher price—we grew it for years beside Enchantress, and got practically 50% more for "Dorothy Gordon." We have an exceptionally good stock of rooted cuttings—you ought to have some of them. Send us your order now or write for further particulars.

Its Color, Substance and Durability Bring You Customers Who STAY.

The New Fern Nephrolepis Dreyerii

GROWN BY

G. DREYER, Elmhurst, Long Island, New York

THIS New Fern, when exhibited at the S. A. F. & O. H. Convention last August, received the following description: "Nephrolepis Dreyerii has many good points which will render it popular. It makes a quick growth, is compact, of good color, and stands considerable rough treatment, adapting itself to almost any condition. It is of the Scottii type, but not as stiff, the fronds drooping gracefully, giving the plant a very attractive appearance."

Price: 2 1/4-inch pots, per 100, $25.00; per 1000, $200.00.

BUFFALO.The Market.

Typical March weather has prevailed, but, much to our surprise, the coldest day of the winter came last week. The temperature dropped from 45 degrees to zero in twenty-four hours. Stock is being used up to good advantage and with the exception of bulbous stock there is not much glut as yet. Bulbous stock, however, is thinning out, as the bulk of it is nearly gone. Roses have a good call and carnations, owing to St. Patrick's day, were cleaned up. White were much in demand and brought 4 cents for the best. The Saturday sales cleaned up the balance. Last week was the spring opening week for the stores, and it is reported to have been a good thing for the florists. Many flowering plants were used and not so much of the palm stock, which takes a lot of work and gives little profit. One store used 125 azaleas and several other large plants, all flowering.

Various Notes.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club will be held the first Tuesday in April. The new officers will then be installed and a large attendance is looked for.

Several florists visited Buffalo last week to attend the bowling congress. The Buffalo boys also took part, but did not get in the prize money. R. A. S.

White Plains, N. Y.—James Davidson, who for many years has been connected with Arthur Dummett, Inc., has opened a flower shop at 11 Spring street, in the store formerly occupied by the Dummett company.

Auburn, N. Y.—Dobbs & Son have found shipping tags effective means of advertising in the retail end of their business. They had the Dennison Mfg. Co. prepare for them a handsome tag, the reverse side of which carried an illustration, or rather a series of illustrations, for one tag shows the exterior of the greenhouses, another the new plant just started for cut flowers, a third the portraits of the firm members, etc.

THE GRANDEST FERN OF THE AGE

NEPHROLEPIS ROOSEVELT

NEPHROLEPIS ROOSEVELT is a sport from Nephrolepis Bostoniensis, but a wonderful improvement over the parent variety and others of stiff, upright growing habit, known as Harrisii or the Harrisii type. It is a stronger maker of fronds and young plants than any other variety and will produce a larger finished plant in a six-inch pot than Boston or Harrisii will produce in a larger size.

The finished fronds of Nephrolepis Roosevelt are at least a third wider than Boston and have more graceful drooping habit. The pinnae are distinctly undulated, giving them a beautiful wavy effect which attracts the eye instantly. Cut flower dealers will find fronds of Roosevelt invaluable for design work. A single plant of Roosevelt grown in a six-inch pot will when finished almost double the number of fronds produced by Boston or Harrisii type varieties and while Boston and Harrisii show stiff, upright growth in a six-inch, the wide, wavy fronds of Roosevelt droop gracefully over the pot, hiding it completely from view. Finished three-inch plants of Roosevelt are equally large and more attractive than the average well-grown four-inch Boston, and growers of Harrisii and the Harrisii type admit they cannot produce attractive plants of these varieties in pots smaller than ten-inch. Without an exception Nephrolepis Roosevelt is the most valuable fern ever offered for florists' use. It has the vitality to withstand more rough treatment than other varieties and does not revert to the parent type. In our long experience we have never offered the trade any plant with greater assurance of entire satisfaction and predict Nephrolepis Roosevelt will very soon lead in popular demand, sweeping from the list Boston, Harrisii and the Harrisii type. We are booking orders for delivery June 1st, 1911, and will fill them in strict rotation as to the date received. Get yours in early; you will not be disappointed in this fern.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Pittsburg had some weather experiences last week; the worst was Wednesday night, when the thermometer fell to zero, with the strongest wind we have had this winter, and it kept up all night and gave the firemen the time of their lives to keep the heat up in the greenhouses, but there were no freeze-ups reported.

Roses get more plentiful every day and carnations and bulb flowers are coming in a rush. Violets are a glut, with little demand for them.

The retail shops complain that they have been compelled to place their hopes on the dead, and there has not been a great deal doing in that line; however, things look brighter for April, as there are quite a few good orders already booked for large social affairs.

Various Notes.

Harry J. Hamm, of Hamilton avenue, east end, erected a large conservatory in the rear of his store, which has a novel heating system of his father's invention, which seems to be the cheapest and best that we have ever seen. Mr. Hamm, Sr., is quite a genius in the mechanical line, and has a number of inventions of his own, which are all time-savers for men in the business.

Pittsburg will be well represented at the National Flower Show, although they will not all get away together, as they usually do. Those already reported are: Fred Burki, P. S. Randolph, Paul Randolph, Stewart Randolph, E. C. Reine-man, Wm. Falconer, DeForest Ludwig, George Burki, Samuel McClements, Albert Lorch, J. W. McNeil, John Walker, of Youngstown, O.; Mr. and Mrs. Kiger, Marietta, O., and others yet to hear from.

Phipps Conservatory, Schenley park, has on exhibition the finest show of cinerarias ever seen in this city.

Lincoln I. Neff, who has been known here in the trade for many years, has the sympathy of all in the loss of his wife, Alice Viola Gordon, in her forty-fifth year, who died suddenly Thursday, March 16. Burial was from the family residence, 661 Orchard avenue, Bellevue.

PROVIDENCE.

The Market.

The florists are experiencing the usual quiet that precedes the Easter hurly-burly and all are on a still hunt among the growers for the best of everything for the great festival. The report from a majority of the growers is that everything is coming along promisingly and that the supply will be sufficient to meet all demands. Several of the growers are complaining that bulbs have proven somewhat below the standard, but otherwise it is believed that the showing will be equal to that of previous years. Already a number of large bookings have been made.

Last week was a normal one for the season, few large funerals occurring. There was a shortage of white carnations the first of the week, the entire market being practically taken to supply the green carnations for March 17. These and small potted shamrocks had enormous sales. Otherwise the week was simply fair.

Various Notes.

Gibson Bros. had a large wedding decoration at Newport, March 18.

A movement is on foot to form a horticultural society at Greystone and a meeting has been called for Friday evening, March 24, for that purpose.

Samuel Kinder has been reappointed tree warden of Bristol.

Charles H. Hunt has a large, fine lot of bulb stock coming along for Easter.

Edward J. Brooks, manager for T. J. Johnston & Co., was in New York for several days last week.

A delegation of upwards of fifty florists and growers from this city and vicinity are contemplating the trip to the National Flower Show with the Florists' and Gardeners' Club of Rhode Island.

Joseph Kopelman has just added a new delivery wagon to his equipment.

Paul De Nave, orchid grower of Fall River, was in the city last week with a fine lot of blooms.

William Mackay, lately gardener for E. T. Gerry at Newport, is now in charge of the Henry A. C. Taylor estate in that city.

Alexander Macrae, of F. Macrae & Sons, was in New York last week on business.

The old reliable firm, GODFREY ASCHMANN, is not connected with any other firm and is more active than ever

Unexpected business prevents us from exhibiting our stock at the Boston Flower Show, March 25, but we kindly ask all of our many customers of the past, and now, if possible to come direct to our establishment, the Great Factory of Live Stock, a Plant Producing Mill that Never Closes, and make a personal inspection of our stock. The Germantown, Chestnut Hill, or Willow Grove trolley, at 13th and 8th and Market, will take you to West Ontario street and from there walk two squares east.

Prepare for Easter

Keep cool! Don't worry! Don't be downhearted! Cheer up! Your old, reliable friend of Philadelphia, Godfrey Aschmann, thinks of you, takes care of you and provides for you in hard times, in war times, in all times. His big stock and his cheap prices of Easter stock will certainly pull you through Easter, 1911.

If you would know the fairest sight your eyes can ever see,
Where the most perfect plants are grown, to Aschmann's come with me.
Why! Ne'er since flowers began to bloom was such a glorious show
Of all the best that florists need found in one place to grow.
The lilies are the very best yet seen on Easter day.
Azaleas are whole sheets of flowers, perfect in every way.
The Araucarias matchless are, so are the ferns all green,
With bulbs, and plumed Spiraea, the best you've ever seen.
And Aschmann gives a challenge, let every florist hear,
For flowers or prices, either, no rival does he fear.
If you wish to gather dollars like violets in the spring,
Then send your largest order, his plants the cash will bring.

Our reputation in growing Easter plants for the wholesale market, to which we ship all over the entire country, Canada and Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans, for many years past, is sufficient guarantee to prove our ability.

No joke—we have this year an immense stock of Lilies—Lilies to burn, to beat the band. Order now Easter Lilies, Lilium multiflorum, the genuine Japanese Easter Lily, directly imported by us. We have a friend in Japan who looks after our interests there. He picks out for us only the good, healthy ones, and marks them while they are growing, the 10-in. bulbs, and therefore he ships to us the cream of the plants of Japan. We have lilies this year to burn; can supply, if nothing happens, every customer and others who want lilies. If you see them growing in our greenhouses you must all admit they are "crack-erjacks." We sell them cheap, too. Where other florists get 15c per bud, we only charge you 10c per bud, for plants in 6-in. pots, having 5, 8, 10 and more buds to the plant. Plants under 5 buds, 12c per bud, 6-in. pots; in all heights, green as grass, good foliage from bottom up.

Spiraea Gladstone for Easter

What is a Home? What is a Store? What is a Church? What is an Easter present without having a few plants of the so much admired and so greatly in demand Spiraea Gladstone? Oh, those charming sprays of beautiful pure white flowers! And the foliage, too, with its waxy, deep green color is a jewel in itself. Mixed with beautiful lilies and other blooming plants it will complete the flower decorations for your happy, joyful Easter of 1911. Knowing the great demand for this plant the past Easters, when not half our customers could be supplied, we are well prepared this year for the rush and in spite of the scarcity last fall in Holland when other florists' supplies were cut short by Holland growers, we were fortunate in obtaining enough of the bulbs to fill two houses and we are able to supply all incoming orders promptly; 5½, 6 to 7-in. pots, full of buds and flowers, and some are as big as a wash tub, 25c, 35c, 50c, 75c and $1.00 each; dozen or more the same.

Go to Headquarters for Azaleas

ASTER SEED, SEMPLE'S BRANCHING. Mr. Phillips, Florist, Syracuse, N. Y., advises us that the aster seed purchased from us produced blooms that carried away the first prize at the last N. Y. We have a small amount of this same seed in stock and will sell it only in mixture of about 1000 seeds, comprising pure white, lavender, pink and purple—about one-third the mixture being pure white. Price, per packet of 1000 seeds, 35 cts.; 4 packets for $1.00. Russell Bros., Route 4, Syracuse, N. Y.

Greenhouse Heating.

HEATING WITH EXHAUST STEAM.

We noted that C. F. C., in The Review of March 16, page 82, was asking for information in regard to the use of exhaust steam for greenhouse heating. He wishes to convey the steam, he says, from an electric light plant about 300 feet distant from the greenhouses. In reply he is told that it is entirely practical to carry the steam that distance. Now, we manufacture a device, the Taylor Vacuum Trap, which is especially adapted for use under such circumstances. To give you an idea of what we are doing with exhaust steam in this city, Battle Creek, Mich., we should like to refer to just one instance in which the trap is in successful operation.

In this case the exhaust steam is taken from a central power station by means of an 8-inch underground pipe, which runs 1,250 feet to a large printing building, 200x350 feet and two stories high. The exhaust steam is put in the system at the power plant end, at about atmospheric pressure, and is circulated through 20,000 feet of 1 1/4-inch pipe by the use of the vacuum traps. Two traps handle this amount of pipe and the water is delivered back to the boiler room, 1,200 feet from the printing building and ten feet higher. The last pipe coil in the system is 1,500 feet away from the point where the steam is admitted to the system, and is 350 feet away from the traps. We have heated this factory, in zero weather, up to the required temperature, which is 72 degrees in some apartments and 80 degrees in others. It is necessary to keep the temperature in the building almost constant, on account of the quantity of ink that must be kept warm.

Taylor Steam Specialty Co.

HEAT FOR THREE HOUSES.

The houses to be heated consist of one house, 18x100, in carnations; one house, 18x100, used for chrysanthemums and sweet peas, and one house, 16x100, in roses. The houses are four feet to the gutters and ten feet to the ridge. They are heated with a 10-section hot water boiler, with a grate surface 20x32 inches. The piping is all 2-inch in the houses. In the carnation house there are twelve runs of pipe; in the mum house, ten runs of pipe, and in the rose house, eight runs. All the pipe is underneath the side benches, and in the carnation and mum houses the pipes

No loss from sudden drops in temperature if you use the

Hughson Regulating Valve

In connection with a steam heating plant. Carry 40 or 50 pounds pressure on the boiler and set the valve for 5 or 10 pounds—it will do the rest. You'll be free from worry this winter, if you follow this advice: "Install a Hughson Regulating Valve when making your repairs." Ask for our Catalogue, which also shows Steam Traps and other devices.

- ¶ This device positively forces the hot water through the system, no matter how long the pipe lines or how complicated the piping.
- ¶ Its action does not depend upon temperature, nor upon additional pressure, which is likely to cause leakage.

degrees in the mum house and 60 degrees in the rose house? What plan would you recommend for the heating of these houses? A. B.

In determining the capacity of a hot water heater a good deal depends upon the efficiency of the fire surface, and without knowing this it is not possible to tell definitely how much radiation a given heater can handle. However, as the area of the grate is only four and one-half square feet, it cannot be rated higher than 1,500 square feet of radiating surface, and it is probable that is a perplexing question to all florists EXCEPT those using

MOREHEAD STEAM TRAPS

- ¶ The installation of a Morehead Return Steam Trap in a Greenhouse is absolute evidence of progressiveness on the part of the florist.
- ¶ It is further evidence of good management, for the "Morehead" is an investment in both satisfaction and economy.
- ¶ The majority of florists are using Morehead Traps. If you are one of the exceptions, it will be to your interest to write us—we will make you a liberal trial offer proposition.
- ¶ By way of getting acquainted, just send your name and address and ask for "Trap Book."

What the Users say

Kroeschell Boiler Better Than Tubular Boilers or Cast Iron Boilers.

Have used upright boiler, tubular boiler, and cast iron boiler. The Kroeschell Boiler heats up better and easier than any other boiler we have ever had anything to do with. If we ever buy another it will certainly be a Kroeschell. Very truly yours,
POOLE & PURILLANT, Washington Court House, Ohio.

Try the Kroeschell first, it's ahead of them all.

I have had eight or ten other types of boilers. The Kroeschell is the best I have ever used. Your boiler heats the water very quick; almost as fast as steam. Yours very truly,
H. K. LEWIS, Dorothy, N. J.

1,250 feet would be enough for it, while the radiation now in the houses is 2,000 square feet. Under these conditions economical results should not be expected.

An even greater discrepancy is noticeable when the amount of radiation in the different houses is compared. The carnation house has fifty per cent more radiation than the rose house, although it is only two feet wider, and this difference in width is more than balanced by the higher temperature required for roses.

At the most only eight runs are required in the carnation house, and seven would answer for chrysanthemums, while to carry the rose house at 60 degrees at least ten runs of 2-inch pipe should be used. If the top of the heater is well below the level of the returns, fairly good results can be secured by using three of the 2-inch pipes as flows in each house, and the others as returns, but it will be even more satisfactory if two 2½-inch pipes are used as flows and five, six and eight 2-inch returns are used respectively in the chrysanthemum, carnation and rose houses.

PELARGONIUMS FOR SPRING.

I have some pansy pelargoniums which I want to hold for Memorial day if I can, but they are already in bud. They are in 4-inch pots and are very bushy. Can you tell me how I can hold them back?
L. C.

If the plants are already showing flower buds, they are rather early for Memorial day. It would have been better to have pinched the plants back a short time ago. You can grow these plants cool; in fact, the cooler they are grown, the better they are. Give them a cold house; 40 degrees at night is ample. Pinch back the flowering shoots. Remove all flowers and give the plants a shift into 5-inch pots. This is only a small shift, but it will tone the plants up considerably. In the event of the plants appearing at all late, you could give them a few degrees more heat after Easter. Grow them as cool, airy and light as possible, and be sure to look out for green aphids. A weekly fumigation will keep them in check.

The Market.

Stock last week was plentiful; every kind of seasonable flower was received in large quantities. In roses, Killarney is of the best quality, while some good Bride, Maid and Richmond are to be seen. Beauties are still scarce and poor. Carnations of all colors and varieties are plentiful. St. Patrick's day called for a great many white, but there were enough to go around. In bulbous stock there is a good variety of tulips, hyacinths, jonquils, daffodils and freesias. Sweet peas are in excellent shape and sell well. Violets, valley, orchids and lilacs move rather slowly.

In pot plants there are azaleas, Easter lilies, primulas and bulbous stock, and these find ready sale.

Various Notes.

Ed Temperly, who has been confined to the hospital for the last two weeks, has returned to his home in a much improved condition.

G. M. Reburn, of A. Henderson & Co., Chicago, spent a day or two in the city last week, calling on the trade. He reports the first three months of his firm's experience far above expectations and sees a bright future.

Mrs. E. A. Nelson is seriously ill. Her condition Sunday, March 12, was quite alarming, but she has since shown some improvement.

Peter Weiland and Myer Heller, of New Castle, and Joseph Rolker, of New York city, were among the visitors last week.

Baur & Smith's wagon was damaged by a collision with a street car one day last week. In avoiding another wagon, the Baur & Smith wagon was struck by the car. Neither the driver nor the horse was hurt, but the wagon was damaged considerably.

Charles Pahud has sold his old motorcycle and invested in a new one, which is of six horse-power and will go much faster than the old one.

A. Wiegand & Sons were quite busy last week decorating for the numerous store openings.

A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE

91-93 CHAMBERS ST. NEW YORK

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet.
An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

YONKERS, N. Y.

On Friday, March 17, a regular meeting of the Yonkers Horticultural Society was held and was largely attended. Various committees reported. The executive committee presented a schedule of classes for the June show, which was adopted with a few amendments.

W. Ellis was elected as an active member and four nominations for membership were made.

A prize given by W. Macdonald brought out some fine exhibits, notably carnations of splendid quality from J. Canning, superintendent for A. Lewishon, of Ardsley, receiving first prize. R. Cochrane, superintendent of the Ewing estate, was placed second, with blooms of fine quality, and H. Scott was third, with My Maryland roses.

E. Bennett, L. Milliot and G. Featherstone acted as judges.

The resignation of Lee Whitman, president, was read and accepted with regret. The lure of the great northwest is responsible for Mr. Whitman's resignation. He received a standing vote of thanks for his services and innumerable wishes for his success.

After the completion of business the evening was given over to sociability. Songs, stories and refreshments of high quality all served to make the evening a most pronounced success. H. M. B.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Even though we are in the midst of Lent, business is not by any means at a standstill. Stock of every description is quite plentiful and of the best quality.

The last few days have been quite warm, causing an overabundance of spring flowers, and it will be hard for some of the growers to hold back their azaleas for Easter, unless the thermometer takes a drop and stays down for a spell.

Various Notes.

The new store at 741 Woodward avenue, to be occupied by the Detroit Floral Co., will be ready for occupancy about March 25. Shortly after the spring planting season the old greenhouses of the above firm will be torn down. The store at the old place will be conducted until fall.

The Bomb Floral Co., although owned by a real German, introduced a clever St. Patrick's day novelty in the form of golden harps about ten inches high, and planted at the base in a cork bark receptacle were shamrocks.

Louis Charvat is after the retail business in the extreme northeastern part of the city. On Theodore street, near Mt. Elliott, he is building three houses, each 20x95, also a small store. The material for the houses is being furnished by the J. C. Moninger Co. Work will be commenced this week.

J. F. Sullivan disposed of a large number of green carnations March 17.

A beautiful modern building, 110x165, is soon to be erected on the corner of Broadway and East Grand River, the site occupied for the last eighteen years by B. Schroeter. The building is to be a public market and promises to be a good thing for Broadway and incidentally the florists in that vicinity.

Among the Detroit party at Boston will be Philip Breitmeyer, Harry Breitmeyer, Robert Rahaley, Chas. Plumb, Wm. Hielscher, Albert Pochelon and others.

M. Bloy is cutting some exceptionally fine forget-me-nots. H. S.

The firm of John Breitmeyer's Sons has been reorganized under the same name. The members now are Philip and Harry Breitmeyer. Herman Klagge, who was a member of the old firm, has retired.

ROCHESTER.

The Market.

The retail florists have been exceptionally busy during the last week. Not only has the demand for cut flowers been strong, but the sale of blooming plants, hyacinths, tulips and daffodils in pots has been unusually large.

Carnations are plentiful, after several weeks of extreme scarcity, and the price has dropped accordingly. Street sellers have offered stock at 35 cents, but retail prices have held at about 50 cents a dozen. Violets meet with a ready sale at prices ranging from 25 cents to 50 cents a bunch—but there is a difference in bunches. Hudson river violets hold at 50 cents. Sweet peas are the popular flower with the ladies at present, but good blooms are scarce.

Viewed from all points, the business of the week has been most satisfactory, and the florists and growers are looking for a continuance of good trade until after Easter.

Various Notes.

John Dunbar, assistant superintendent of parks, is watching with much interest a collection of spruce and fir seeds from China, which have recently been started in the Highland park greenhouses. The seeds were sent to Mr. Dunbar by E. H. Wilson, the well-known explorer sent to China by Harvard University.

President G. B. Hart, of the Florists' Association, has successfully inaugurated a plan whereby the meetings will be made instructive to the members. At the February meeting an address was given on "Plant Selection," and the March meeting was made particularly valuable and interesting by W. C. Barry, of Ellwanger & Barry, who gave a practical talk on "Roses."

E. F. R.

Plans have been completed for the erection of large plant houses at the South avenue entrance to Highland park. The execution of the plans has been placed in charge of William C. Barry, Superintendent of Parks Laney and Assistant Superintendent Dunbar.

As Usual We Will Have an Exhibit at The Boston Show

A splendid, full grown exhibit that will be right up to our usual standard. No, that's not quite the truth—it is going to surpass anything we have done before. Not a splurge, mind you, but the kind of Exhibit from which you can take away a good bundle of ideas.

It's main idea is to "show you" in a compact and comprehensive way what we can do for you.

Several of our salesmen are going to be there. They are a great lot of handshakers, and you will be made jolly well welcome.

Standard Sill and Gutter Type

Improved Curvilinear Type

Our Model Curved-eave House

We are very serious about that exhibit of ours at the Boston Flower Show

By serious we mean we have made every effort to make it decidedly worth your while to see it. A display of interest to you all.

Our Iron Frame House with both curved eave and side will be there. Also our regular angle eave and iron post construction. That long run under bench ventilation apparatus that has made such a stir the last year will be set up ready for you to give it all sorts of tests. Incidentally, it might be well to "knock" it good and hard to one of our men in charge. It will at least be interesting to see what a good line of "reason talk" he can put up to meet your every knock. He knows what it will do because of what it has already done.

The Trouble Man and our boilers, that are trouble-proof, will be on hand, each backing the other up.

Just before you leave, tap some one of us on the shoulder, and by that sign we will know it is time for our souvenir—not "some fool thing," but the kind of souvenir you put in your pocket and carry around for life—that kind of a souvenir.

To the man who needs a Boiler

THE KROESCHELL GREENHOUSE BOILER

Here is the boiler that is making the most wonderful greenhouse heating record in the world. Florists and gardeners who have used other makes are constantly giving the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler the highest praise.

10,788,000 square feet of glass was equipped with the Kroeschell Boiler during the past five years. You will find the new 1910 model Kroeschell Hot Water Boiler in every state in the Union and Canada.

Our Eastern business has been exceedingly heavy the past season.

Kroeschell vs. Cast Iron Boilers

Over 1500 Cast Iron Boilers were replaced by the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler during the past six years. It is a common occurrence for a Kroeschell to replace two to four cast iron boilers at a single place; this is the CENTRAL HEATING SYSTEM PLAN, and has saved many florists hundreds of dollars per season in fuel alone, besides a big saving in labor.

OUR HEATING ENGINEER has probably had more practical experience in this line than any other greenhouse man, and we place his experience at your service.

WHAT THE USERS SAY

Kroeschell Replaces Three (3) Cast Iron Boilers.

We purchased of you this spring a No. 6 Kroeschell Boiler, which you guaranteed would take the place of three cast iron boilers. Well, the whole thing in a nutshell is this—your word is as good as gold. Night before last we had a severe storm of snow and sleet and a very high wind; we had not the least bit of trouble. We fired the last at 10 p. m., November 24th, and the next morning at 7 o'clock we looked at the houses and found it only 1 degree less than when we fired the last coal, 9 hours earlier. If this isn't magnificent work and a good test, we would be pleased to hear from anyone else that could furnish a better boiler. We know if parties wishing a boiler would get one from you they never would try any other. We think in 5 years' running of this boiler we will have the price saved in the difference in our coal bill. Wishing you the best of success, we remain,

Very truly yours,
ADAM LAUB & SON, Hughsonville, N. Y.

WASHINGTON COURT HOUSE, OHIO.
Have used upright boiler, tubular boiler and cast iron boiler. The Kroeschell Boiler heats up better and easier than any other boiler we have ever had anything to do with. If we ever buy another, it will certainly be a Kroeschell. Very truly yours,

POOLE & PURLLANT.

THE KROESCHELL PIPING SYSTEM—

Circulation is perfect.
Cheaper and better than 1, 1½, 1¾ or 2-in. threaded pipe.
Overcomes all the disadvantages of 4-in. cast iron pipe.
No deep boiler pits required.

THE KROESCHELL GENERATOR—

Cures sluggish circulation.
Water travels three to five times faster.
Saves fuel.
Prevents boiling over.
Water can be heated to 240 degrees without boiling, making it possible to have steam temperatures in your piping if wanted.
Greatly improves systems having long mains and coils.
Can be connected to any hot water system, no matter what kind of boiler or piping is used.
Easy to install—simply attach to your present expansion pipe.

WHAT THE USERS SAY

Cast Iron Boilers Cause Freeze-out—Kroeschell Boilers no Worry.

I bought a No. 2 boiler in 1902. Takes care of 7000 sq. ft. of glass—would take care of 2000 more. I have had a cast iron boiler, but it broke down twice in four years, always in the coldest weather. It broke down Dec. 29, 1904, and I lost all my stock in consequence. I have now two No. 2 and one No. 6 Kroeschell Boilers and do not worry about their breaking down.

GRANT NEWPORT, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Kroeschell Does Our Work Easier than Cast Iron Boilers and Saves 20 to 25% Fuel.

The No. 4 boiler is heating 10,000 sq. ft. of glass—it would take care of 13,000 sq. ft. easy. Have no trouble to keep temperature of 50 and 60 degrees in coldest weather. The boiler has given perfect satisfaction. We had two cast-iron boilers, one rated for 1200 ft. of pipe and one rated for 1500 ft. These boilers never did the work at their best and when the greenhouses were new. According to our experience with yours, we will save 20 to 25 per cent of fuel.

HILD BROS., Lake Forest, Ill.

Try the Kroeschell First—It's Ahead of Them All.

I have had eight or ten other types of boilers. The Kroeschell is the best I have ever used. Your boiler heats the water very quickly—almost as fast as steam. Yours very truly,
H. K. LEWIS, Dorothy, N. J.

THE NATIONAL FLOWER SHOW

A WONDERFUL EXHIBITION.

Greatest Yet Held in America.

After two and one-half years of preparation, the National Flower Show, the second held in America and the first attempt at a comprehensive spring exhibition, is this week scoring a success even beyond the dreams of those most sanguine in their expectations. No flower show ever held on this side of the Atlantic, spring or autumn, has approached this exhibition either for size, for quality, for variety, in arrangement or in general interest for the public or the trade—no flower show yet held has attracted so many trade visitors, or from such great distances. The trade visitors include eleven from England, one from Portland, Ore., two from Denver, four from Council Bluffs, Ia., twenty from Chicago, and rapidly increasing numbers from points less distant. As showing how good news spreads, many arrivals in the opening days were so favorably impressed that they telegraphed to friends at home: "It's a great show; better drop everything and come."

A spring show has many advantages over an autumn exhibition. At this season a wonderful variety of material is available; nothing so overshadows all else as does the chrysanthemum in November. A wealth of blooming plants makes possible a much more pleasing spectacle. The one disadvantage, though it does not apply to the public, is that the trade is in the midst of its busy season. Many of those who favored the spring date and who are regular in their attendance wherever the trade foregathers, when the time came found themselves ill able to afford the time for a long trip and a show covering eight days, but those who made the sacrifice found themselves well repaid, while those who stayed away can not soon regain what they have lost—a liberal education in the progress and development of floriculture.

Magnitude of the Exhibition.

Mechanics building, where the show opened March 25 to continue to April 1, is the largest building in Boston. With its several halls it has a floor space measured, not in square feet, but in acres. To fill this vast edifice was at first considered difficult, but, with the entire lower floor occupied by a business getting exhibition by the allied trades, the main floor has proved actually too small for the proper display of the stock. As an instance, W. A. Manda, who sent from South Orange, N. J., to Chicago two carloads of plants for the first National Flower Show, is at Boston with five carloads of stock! It seems an incredible quantity, but he shipped one car by freight, and the plants he would not intrust to this method of transportation the express company was unable to load without using four cars. From Cromwell, Conn., A. N. Pierson had over a carload, and M. H. Walsh and Thomas Roland also had more plants than could be loaded in a single car. While some of the groups are wonderfully effective, there are few that would not be better for more space.

Boston was selected for this show because it is the one city in all America that has the stock, in quantity and in perfection, for a grand spring show.

held in Boston. In cut flowers those within reasonable shipping distance did their part and captured a fair proportion of the prizes.

The Retailers' Exhibits.

While the genistas, the acacias, the bougainvilleas, the azaleas, the cyclamens, the orchids, the Dutch garden, the Italian garden and many other features were notable in the highest de-

Very truly yours,

Chairman, National Flower Show Committee.

Still one hears the criticism that it is a Boston show! That, save for two or three notable exceptions, all the stock exhibited is local! Of course it is. Neither the west nor, for that matter, any other city in the east ever has produced such blooming plants. It was to see these things that the show was gree, a word should be said for the Boston retail florists, several of whom put up displays that for beauty and interest were not excelled by any other parts of the show. Penn, who never misses an opportunity to call attention to his wedding work, built a booth to represent the approach to the altar and, with the richly attired figures used in dry goods show windows, had his full wedding party on parade, bride, bridesmaid and flower girls, each carrying the arrangement appropriate for the occasion. Thomas F. Galvin also made a beautiful, though less highly colored picture, with marble lawn furniture in a skillfully arranged setting of plants and flowers. Hoffman worked along the same lines, the excellent taste displayed in each booth holding a crowd at all times, showing that in Boston, as in other cities where the retailers participate in the flower shows, their work has a special interest for the public.

The Public Responds.

The show was opened promptly on time and with due eclat. The governor of Massachusetts was there to make a speech; also the mayor of Boston, and Chairman F. R. Pierson had primed himself for one of the flights of eloquence at which he is becoming so adept, as was befitting the occasion. The Robert Craig Co., which had a splendid lot of seedling crotons, took the opportunity of naming one of the showiest varieties for the governor, which gave the newspapers something to talk about—and the public poured in, to go into ecstasies of admiration and go home to tell their friends of its wonders. If the crush of the opening night is repeated a few times during the run of the show, the guarantors will not only get their money back, but they and the S. A. F. will have a profit, costly as is so great an exhibition.

SOME SPECIAL FEATURES.

Boston "Makes Good."

Boston has for over a year been laboring strenuously to make good when the time for the S. A. F. National Show arrived. Pessimists there were in plenty who predicted that it would be a physical impossibility to fill the huge Mechanics building with exhibits, but the committee in charge has worked long and arduously and its labors have been crowned with a glorious success, for never before in America has such a wealth of choice material been brought together at one time under one roof. Not only is the main exhibition hall filled to repletion, but trade exhibits fill the balconies and basement, this department far surpassing in magnitude all previous conventions.

Very severe weather prevailed March 24 and 25, temperatures of from zero to 16 degrees above being recorded near Boston. This seriously inconvenienced and handicapped exhibitors and some choice plants were injured, but all these obstacles were overcome, and when the time for opening arrived at 8 p. m., March 25, practically every exhibit was in its place and a large proportion of the classes were judged before the thousands of visitors began to pour in.

The premium lists will tell the story of the awards made and reference here will consequently only be made to some of those of striking merit, and these were so numerous that it is difficult to single out any individual exhibits, particularly when all were of such superior merit.

The general lay-out of the show showed most excellent taste. It was an impossibility to see much of the show at a single glance, as, for instance, in Horticultural hall, and there were so many unique features that every fresh turn opened up additional charming vistas. The decorations of bunting, southern smilax, etc., took away any appearance of bareness and the many big palms and other foliage plants broke any possible monotony.

Pot Plants.

Taking the pot plants, the roses were exhibited in vast quantities, the immense and beautifully arranged groups of Thomas Roland and M. H. Walsh being a whole exhibition in themselves. Mr. Roland's display was arranged in the form of a rose garden, with rustic fences, pergolas, etc., covered with finely flowered plants of Tausendschon, Lady Gay, Crimson Rambler and Hiawatha. Beds of such varieties as Clothilde Soupert, Dorothy Gordon, Dennison, a lovely new pink variety, the glorious new single American Pillar, with its massive heads of beautiful flowers, Hiawatha, Electra, white Dorothy Perkins and some twenty other varieties formed one of the most beautiful spring rose displays I had ever seen. This was a big exhibit for one man, but Mr. Roland had others of almost equal magnitude.

Mr. Walsh's plants were entirely composed of seedlings of his own raising. These were in some cases perfect specimens eight to nine feet high, and all were of considerable size and had sufficient room to show off their individuality. Especially noteworthy were Mrs. M. H. Walsh, a beautiful new double white; Lucille, a charming light pink; Winona, Maid Marian and Summer Joy. All these are novelties. Among the older kinds were: Paradise, Milky Way, a lovely single white; Minnehaha, Lady Gay, Celeste, Delight, Lady Blanche, Kalmia, of true mountain laurel color, Excelsa and La Fiamma.

Hard-Wooded Plants.

Hard-wooded plants are usually seen well done at the Boston shows, but never before were they seen in such numbers or of such quality as at the present exhibition. Thomas Roland richly deserved the special thanks of the judges, as his superb collection of ericas, boronias and acacias represented a heavy sacrifice in money in order to help make the show a grand success. He had many beautiful plants of the graceful Acacia pubescens and about a dozen other sorts. Then, in ericas, both the small flowered and large, waxy types were shown in quantity, the plants being in every case profusely flowered.

George Page, gardener to Mrs. Frederick Ayer, also put up a grand lot of such acacias as Drummondii, armata, pulchella, hybrida, longifolia and heterophylla, and splendid specimens of such ericas as Caffra, melanthera, ursularis, arborea and Mediterranea. Knight & Struck, of New York, also had a charming table of ericas, including cupressina, persoluta alba, persoluta rosea and Fabiana imbricata. W. W. Edgar Co. had a splendid lot of azaleas, including some new ones, such as Lady Roosevelt, flesh; Star of Somergem, large white; Rudolf Seidel and Souvenir de W. W. Edgar, rosy red. Charles Sander, gardener to Prof. C. S. Sargent, had a batch of a pretty new azalea in the way of Amœna. He also had a beautiful group of clivias and specimen plants of Erica melanthera. A. Leuthy & Co. had plants of a new azalea named A. B. C., a hybrid between a rhododendron and azalea.

The specimen Chorizema ilicifolium from William Thatcher, gardener to Mrs. J. L. Gardner, attracted much notice, being gloriously flowered. Peirce Bros.' azaleas, lilacs and lilies were noteworthy, while the huge azaleas from C. B. Newbold, Jenkintown, Pa., were a whole show in themselves.

Orchids, Schizanthus, etc.

Among the orchids, which were shown in large numbers, in spite of the date being rather an off one for cattleyas, were many choice things. In Julius Roehrs' collections were noted the rare and beautiful Brasso-cattleyas, Digbyana-Warneri, Digbyana-Schroederæ, Digbyana-gigas, Digbyana-Mendellii, Cattleya Dusseldorfi, Undine, Cypripedium Maudslayi, Miltonia Bleuana and others. E. B. Dane, Donald McKenzie gardener, had also a grand lot of choice cypripediums, cattleyas and odontoglossums. J. T. Butterworth had a wonderful specimen of cattleyas, Thayeriana carrying sixty flowers and many other well grown plants in variety. W. C. Rust's and Henry Stewart's specimen dendrobiums were also noteworthy.

Schizanthus from James Marlborough, J. L. Smith, William Thatcher and others were splendidly grown, as were Daniel Whyte's specimen single geraniums. Among H. A. Dreer's exhibits the new double marguerite, Mrs. F. Sander, and the new cyrtomium, Rochfordi, attracted a great deal of notice. William C. Rust, gardener to Dr. C. G. Weld, had beautiful groups of cyclamens, Primula obconica and bulbous plants. In the bulb classes also, J. L. Smith, gardener to A. W. Preston, came out strongly, as did William Patterson, William Thatcher and other well known growers.

Roses, Valley, Gardenias.

Among the newer roses which showed up to great advantage were F. R. Pierson's new sport from White Killarney, an immense double pink flower, a little paler than the original Killarney; Waban Conservatories' and W. H. Elliott's Mrs. Aaron Ward; Myers & Samtman's Hilda; Elliott's William Shean, a mammoth new pink, with a color, however, less pleasing than Killarney, and Elliott's Mrs. A. C. Waddell. A. N. Pierson showed Red Killarney, Prince de Bulgarie, Lady Cromwell and several others. The general quality of the roses was high and competition keen, especially in the Killarney classes.

Remarkably fine were the exhibits of lily of the valley and gardenias from John McFarland, the lily of the valley from J. T. Butterworth and an extensive lilac display from Elie Rambault, Buena, N. J.

Some of W. A. Manda's exhibits were late in getting to the hall. He had many fine specimen plants. Specially noteworthy were Kentias Belmoreana and Forsteriana, Rhaps flabelliformis and humilis, Cycas circinalis, Licuala grandis, Cyathea medullaris, Davallias Mooreana and Dracena Victoria.

Italian and Dutch Gardens.

Carbone's Italian garden, with statuary, pergolas and a tasteful arrangement of flowering and foliage plants, was a pleasing feature. Roland's bougainvilleas and amaryllis, MacMulkin's group of plants and the Robert Craig Co.'s collection of crotons in over 100 varieties were all star features. The latter included many fine seedlings. They also had a new pandanus, a sport from Sanderæ, but much prettier and with more character; also fine cyclamens, Ficus pandurata and ferns.

The largest individual exhibit was the Dutch garden of R. & J. Farquhar & Co., which included windmills, tea house, representations of dikes, and beds containing many thousands of tulips, narcissi, hyacinths, spiræas, flowering shrubs and a wealth of other material. The paths were of gravel and hundreds of evergreen shrubs were used to bank up the exhibits. This feature occupied a space 95x120 and entailed a great amount of labor in its preparation. A. N. Pierson had a specially fine lot of Adiantum Farleyense and finely flowered rhododendrons, azaleas and other seasonable stock.

Gardeners' Exhibits.

The National Association of Gardeners had a large number of exhibits in their special classes. William Kleinheinz, the president of the association, was the largest exhibitor and worked hard to have everything in good shape for the judges. His roses were extra fine. Some other exhibitors in these classes included C. B. Newbold, Samuel Batchelor gardener; John Wanamaker, John H. Dodds gardener; Henry Siegel, Thomas Aitchison gardener; W. W. Heroy, Stamford, Conn., Abraham Wynn gardener, and Dr. C. G. Weld, W. C. Rust gardener.

Paul De Nave, of Fall River, the orchid specialist, had some extra fine Cattleya Schrøderæ and dendrobiums. Lager & Hurrell's collection also included some choice varieties. The big groups of coniferous plants from the Eastern Nurseries, W. A. Manda, Bobbink & Atkins, Ellwanger & Barry, Farquhar & Co. and others, were noteworthy, as were the specimens of trimmed box from Bobbink & Atkins, Manda, Sidney Hoffman and others. Farquhar & Co.'s collection of new plants from northern China, which received a silver medal, included some valuable additions to our hardy plant list, such as Clematis montana rubens, spiræas, deutzias and many other varieties. John C. Hatcher's new asparagus, Hatcheri, seems lighter and more graceful than A. plumosus nanus and was much admired. The mignonette from William Nicholson was grand, and William Walke's new pink snapdragon had a host of admirers. The F. R.

Galvin also made a beautiful, though less highly colored picture, with marble lawn furniture in a skillfully arranged setting of plants and flowers. Pierson Co.'s nephrolepis were superbly grown; N. elegantissima compacta was especially good.

W. A. Manda had no less than five carloads of exhibits and captured as many premiums as anyone in the exhibition. He showed in more classes than any other exhibitor. The specimen Anthurium Andreanum from Mrs. Lester Leland, Eric Wetterlow gardener, and William Thatcher's big Phyllotanium Lindenii were splendidly grown. Farquhar's thirty-six cyclamens, which took first prize, were models of cultural skill and a prominent New York retailer remarked that if he could procure such plants in that city they would meet with a big sale.

Mayor Fitzgerald, in the course of his remarks at the formal opening in the Paul Revere hall, said, "I sometimes think that the love of flowers comes down to us from an ancestral sojourn in Paradise and is older and more natural than original sin itself." His Honor of Boston always has the happy knack of saying something pleasing to his audiences. W. N. Craig.

THE TRADE EXHIBITION.

A Comprehensive Display.

The trade display in connection with a flower show was a new feature. The great size of the hall and the need for all the revenue that was legitimately to be had inspired the management to undertake what proved to be second only to the largest of August convention showings by the houses seeking patronage. While the showing was nearly all by eastern houses, and some of the prominent supply dealers, who are in the midst of their Easter rush, were not represented, the display on the whole was comprehensive and much larger than was expected when the idea of such an adjunct was first adopted. The allied trades occupied the entire lowest floor. None of the western greenhouse material houses was represented, but the eastern firms all came in strongly, there being several with elaborate installations who have not been seen at an S. A. F. affair in years. The boiler men, too, were strongly represented. The supply houses were put on a balcony, where they had large, light quarters, excellently adapted to their needs. The plantmen were placed on the main floor, along with the general exhibits, but they were held to the same rules as the other exhibitors and staged their stock so attractively that few outside the trade appreciated that these exhibits had any different character from the others.

Plants.

Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, did not make a large display, as at the August conventions, but showed a number of specialties, including Cyrtomium Rochfordii, Ananas sativus variegatus, and Marguerite Mrs. F. Sander, all of which are new. Cibotium Schiedeii and Cocos Weddelliana, the latter in the larger sizes only, also were shown. The exhibit was in charge of J. J. Karins and J. Hay.

Robert Craig Co., Philadelphia, had a trade display that held equal interest with any of the competitive groups. Perhaps most notable was a table of fifty seedling crotons, every one distinct from any variety now in commerce and many of excellent promise. These are to be disseminated this year. The display of samples of the general stock of crotons contained sixty varieties, for the Craigs are the largest growers of crotons in America. The most conspicuous plant in the groups of this exhibitor was Pandanus Pride of Lindhurst, a gold and green sport of Sanderi that originated with John Dodds, gardener to John Wanamaker, and which is to be disseminated by Craig. One of the Craig groups contained Dracaena Massangeana, D. terminalis, D. fragrans, Areca lutescens, Phoenix Roebelenii, the entire Boston family of ferns, featuring Harrisii, Pandanus Veitchii, Ficus pandurata and Easter stock of hydrangeas, spiræas, rambler roses, etc. The display was in charge of R. A. Craig, W. P. Craig and Duncan Macaw.

Not content with entering in competition in most of the fern classes, the

F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., staged in the trade display a large table of the descendants of Boston. The list included the following sorts: Boston, Scholzei, Superbissima, Elegantissima improved, Piersoni, Whitmani, Todeaoides, Elegantissima, Elegantissima compacta, Amerpohlii, Scottii, Giatrasii, Harrisii, a new dwarf Boston, Viridissima, new, and Muscosa, newest of all, save for two that are so new they have not been named. The exhibit was in charge of J. R. Fotheringham and Theodore Trevellian.

A. N. Pierson, Cromwell, Conn., in the main hall had a large table on which was grouped an extremely large line of commercial stock, principally plants grown specially for Easter, including azaleas, rhododendrons, rambler roses, hydrangeas, spiræas, gardenias, orchids, lilies, etc.; also such begonias as Lorraine, Prima Donna and Glory of Cincinnati; palms, ferns, crotons, cibotiums, Farleyense, ficus, Asparagus Hatcheri, bedding stock and eight varieties of young rose stock, both grafted and own-root, the whole finished off with vases of cut flowers of Red Killarney, Prince de Bulgarie, Lady Cromwell, Dark Pink Killarney and other roses. W. R. Pierson was in charge, with several assistants.

Aside from the splendid group of orchids and many other things entered for competition, Julius Roehrs Co., Rutherford, N. J., made a large trade exhibit, including commercial sizes of crotons, dracaenas, palms, pandanus, boxwood in all forms, bay trees, begonias and many other things. In charge of Julius Roehrs, Jr., and R. Muller.

The Yokohama Nursery Co., New York, had a table of 250 plants in thirty varieties of dwarf evergreens. In charge of A. Kakuda.

C. Keur & Sons, Hillegom, Holland, had a booth enclosed by boxwoods in many forms, at which they showed their bulbs as flowered by their Boston customers. J. Keur was in charge.

Lager & Hurrell, Summit, N. J., in addition to its entries, had a trade exhibit including a large variety of orchids, finely flowered, also a number of freshly imported plants. J. E. Lager was in charge.

Knight & Struck, New York, had a large table of commercial Easter plants, including Erica cypripedium, E. persoluta alba and E. persoluta rosea, Rhododendron Profusion, standard acacias, standard genistas, Azalea fragrantissima and others. Both Mr. Knight and Mr. Struck were in attendance.

Gt. Van Waveren & Kruijff, Sassenheim, Holland, and Philadelphia, Pa., showed Spiraea Queen Alexandra and S. Gladstone, also tulips, daffodils and hyacinths grown at their place in Holland and flowered at Philadelphia; also dahlia roots. Ed. L. Mullen was in charge.

Paul de Nave, Fall River, Mass., staged a collection of orchids by no means so large as some of the others, but of fine quality. There were about thirty-five plants in variety, all beautifully flowered.

New England Nurseries, Bedford, Mass., showed fifty evergreens, of many varieties, in tubs; also a line of oak and cedar jardinières and plant tubs.

A. Leuthy, Roslindale, Mass., aside from his competitive entries, had a large group in the trade display, including palms, pandanus, araucarias, dracenas, adiantums, asparagus and many other decorative plants in commercial sizes.

Bobbink & Atkins, Rutherford, N. J., in the trade display put up a large group of commercial stock, including kentias, Phoenix Roebelenii, pandanus, dracenas, Azalea mollis and many others; also plant tubs.

In addition to entries in over 100 competitive classes, W. A. Manda staged a long table and a large group of palms, ferns and miscellaneous decorative plants in the ordinary commercial sizes, and a 100-foot row of large evergreens in tubs.

Mt. Desert Nurseries, Bar Harbor, Me., put up a large table of Nephrolepis E. Milleri, locally known as the Bar Harbor lace fern. In charge of E. Miller.

The Crowl Fern Co., Millington, Mass., showed hardy cut ferns, galax leaves, laurel wreathing, evergreen boughs, etc. In charge of E. W. Vineca.

Eastern Nursery Co., Jamaica Plain, Mass., staged thirty-two varieties of evergreens in pots, including specially nice pieces of Picea pungens glauca, Pinus Mugho, Abies Veitchii and Retinospora Crippsii. George Pettfield was in charge.

Ellwanger & Barry, Rochester, N. Y., exhibited a large collection of evergreens in boxes, but too closely crowded to show their quality or permit examination.

W. W. Edgar Co., Waverley, Mass., staged a group of flowering and foliage plants that in themselves would make a small flower show. It included acacias, genistas, hydrangeas, azaleas, lilies, lilacs, roses, palms, ferns, crotons, bay trees and many others, all in the commercial sizes. In charge of J. F. Edgar.

The North Shore Ferneries Co., Beverly, Mass., had a large display of many kinds of garden and lawn furniture.

Joseph Traudt, Canajoharie, N. Y., showed his variegated form of Alyssum Little Gem.

R. C. Bridgham, of the Newton Rose Conservatories, Newtonville, Mass., had an attractive display of palms, ferns, flowering plants and bedding stock.

Kessler Bros., New York, staged a half-dozen fine plants of Nephrolepis Dreyeri, in addition to the one that took a prize in the class for best new fern.

Ribbons and Supplies.

S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., Philadelphia, had a long table of ribbons, including the staple styles, but featuring a new Fille ribbon six inches wide in nineteen shades, including many that are new in flower stores. Another specialty featured is a satin moire corsage ribbon, each color striped in five shades. A new line of corsage ties is shown in all flower colors, the butterfly bows being in a new form. The display was in charge of Alfred Swan, Robert Greenlaw and J. E. H. Rorichard.

Wertheimer Bros., New York, had a large display of staple ribbons and Sprinkleproof ribbons and chiffons in various weaves and colors; also several new things—lace drapery in all colors; Sunrise chiffon, vari-toned gauze, radium glaze corsage ribbon, chiffon with gold and silver border, multi-tone chiffon, and Grenadine corsage ribbon, all in a variety of colors. A large line of spun glass and cut glass corsage pins also was shown. S. B. Wertheimer personally was in charge, with several assistants.

Henry M. Robinson, Boston, made a large display of supplies, including boxes, baskets, ribbons, artificial flowers and designs, toneware, and practically all the staples. The exhibit also contained hardy greens, such as ferns, galax, boxwood and laurel, with a lot of them made up into designs to illustrate different uses for the materials.

Pierson Co.'s nephrolepis were superbly grown; N. elegantissima compacta was especially good.

W. A. Manda had no less than five carloads of exhibits and captured as many premiums as anyone in the exhibition. He showed in more classes than any other exhibitor. The specimen Anthurium Andreanum from Mrs. Lester Leland, Erie Wetterlow gardener, and William Thatcher's big Phyllotanium Lindenii were splendidly grown. Farquhar's thirty-six cyclamens, which took first prize, were models of cultural skill and a prominent New York retailer remarked that if he could procure such plants in that city they would meet with a big sale.

Mayor Fitzgerald, in the course of his remarks at the formal opening in the Paul Revere hall, said, "I sometimes think that the love of flowers comes down to us from an ancestral sojourn in Paradise and is older and more natural than original sin itself." His Honor of Boston always has the happy knack of saying something pleasing to his audiences.

THE TRADE EXHIBITION.

A Comprehensive Display.

The trade display in connection with a flower show was a new feature. The great size of the hall and the need for all the revenue that was legitimately to be had inspired the management to undertake what proved to be second only to the largest of August convention showings by the houses seeking patronage. While the showing was nearly all by eastern houses, and some of the prominent supply dealers, who are in the midst of their Easter rush, were not represented, the display on the whole was comprehensive and much larger than was expected when the idea of such an adjunct was first adopted. The allied trades occupied the entire lowest floor. None of the western greenhouse material houses was represented, but the eastern firms all came in strongly, there being several with elaborate installations who have not been seen at an S. A. F. affair in years. The boiler men, too, were strongly represented. The supply houses were put on a balcony, where they had large, light quarters, excellently adapted to their needs. The plantsmen were placed on the main floor, along with the general exhibits, but they were held to the same rules as the other exhibitors and staged their stock so attractively that few outside the trade appreciated that these exhibits had any different character from the others.

Plants.

Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, did not make a large display, as at the August conventions, but showed a number of specialties, including Cyrtomium Rochfordii, Ananas sativus variegatus, and Marguerite Mrs. F. Sander, all of which are new. Cibotium Schiedeii and Cocos Weddelliana, the latter in the larger sizes only, also were shown. The exhibit was in charge of J. J. Karins and J. Hay.

Robert Craig Co., Philadelphia, had a trade display that held equal interest with any of the competitive groups. Perhaps most notable was a table of fifty seedling crotons, every one distinct from any variety now in commerce and many of excellent promise. These are to be disseminated this year. The display of samples of the general stock of crotons contained sixty varieties, for the Craigs are the largest growers of crotons in America. The most conspicuous plant in the groups of this exhibitor was Pandanus Pride of Lindhurst, a gold and green sport of Sanderi that originated with John Dodds, gardener to John Wanamaker, and which is to be disseminated by Craig. One of the Craig groups contained Dracena Massangeana, D. terminalis, D. fragrans, Areca lutescens, Phoenix Roebelenii, the entire Boston family of ferns, featuring Harrisii, Pandanus Veitchii, Ficus pandurata and Easter stock of hydrangeas, spiraeas, rambler roses, etc. The display was in charge of R. A. Craig, W. P. Craig and Duncan Macaw.

Not content with entering in competition in most of the fern classes, the

F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., staged in the trade display a large table of the descendants of Boston. The list included the following sorts: Boston, Scholzei, Superbissima, Elegantissima improved, Piersoni, Whitmani, Todeaoides, Elegantissima, Elegantissima compacta, Amerpohlii, Scottii, Giustrasii, Harrisii, a new dwarf Boston, Viridissima, new, and Muscosa, newest of all, save for two that are so new they have not been named. The exhibit was in charge of J. R. Fotheringham and Theodore Trevellian.

A. N. Pierson, Cromwell, Conn., in the main hall had a large table on which was grouped an extremely large line of commercial stock, principally plants grown specially for Easter, including azaleas, rhododendrons, rambler roses, hydrangeas, spiraeas, gardenias, orchids, lilies, etc.; also such begonias as Lorraine, Prima Donna and Glory of Cincinnati; palms, ferns, crotons, cibotiums, Farleyense, ficus, Asparagus Hatcheri, bedding stock and eight varieties of young rose stock, both grafted and own-root, the whole finished off with vases of cut flowers of Red Killarney, Prince de Bulgarie, Lady Cromwell, Dark Pink Killarney and other roses. W. R. Pierson was in charge, with several assistants.

Aside from the splendid group of orchids and many other things entered for competition, Julius Roehrs Co., Rutherford, N. J., made a large trade exhibit, including commercial sizes of crotons, dracenas, palms, pandanus, boxwood in all forms, bay trees, begonias and many other things. Both Mr. Knight and Mr. Struck were in attendance.

Ellwanger & Barry, Rochester, N. Y., exhibited a large collection of evergreens in boxes, but too closely crowded to show their quality or permit examination.

W. W. Edgar Co., Waverley, Mass., staged a group of flowering and foliage plants that in themselves would make a small flower show. It included acacias, genistas, hydrangeas, azaleas, lilies, lilacs, roses, palms, ferns, crotons, bay trees and many others, all in the commercial sizes. In charge of J. F. Edgar.

The North Shore Ferneries Co., Beverly, Mass., had a large display of many kinds of garden and lawn furniture.

Ribbons and Supplies.

S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., Philadelphia, had a long table of ribbons, including the staple styles, but featuring a new Fille ribbon six inches wide in nineteen shades, including many that are new in flower stores. Another specialty featured is a satin moire corsage ribbon, each color striped in five shades. A new line of corsage ties is shown in all flower colors, the butterfly bows being in a new form. The display was in charge of Alfred Swan, Robert Greenlaw and J. E. H. Rorichard.

Wertheimer Bros., New York, had a large display of staple ribbons and Sprinkleproof ribbons and chiffons in various weaves and colors; also several new things—lace drapery in all colors; Sunrise chiffon, vari-toned gauze, radium glaze corsage ribbon, chiffon with gold and silver border, multi tone chiffon, and Grenadine corsage ribbon, all in a variety of colors. A large line of spun glass and cut glass corsage pins also was shown. S. B. Wertheimer personally was in charge, with several assistants.

The display was in charge of Charles Robinson, with several assistants.

J. G. Neidinger, Philadelphia, had a large line of florists' supplies, principally wax, artificial and metal designs, but including ribbons and chiffons, baskets, pot covers, cypreas leaves, immortelles, thread, etc. Mr. Neidinger personally was in charge.

how the plants in this receptacle stand neglect. W. E. Cahill was in charge.

The boiler department was represented by one sectional and two round boilers.

The King Construction Co., North Tonawanda, N. Y., erected a section of iron-frame greenhouse to illustrate the details of several styles of construction and also put up a model of its fire-proof boiler house. Ventilating apparatus, shelf brackets and a large line of pipe hangers and fittings were shown. The display was in charge of R. O. King, J. C. Luff and H. E. Bates.

Hitchings & Co., Elizabeth, N. J., put up a house in sections to show three styles of construction, all iron-frame, but one with curved eave, another with curved side and the third the regular angle eave and iron post construction. The two former showed the use of the iron sill on a concrete side wall. The installation showed five different ways of applying the company's worm gear ventilating machine, specially illustrating the long-run-under-bench feature. Wall frames showed details of bars, gutters and plates in all styles. A Hitchings 1910 model sectional boiler bore the announcement that it is made in twenty-six sizes for steam and hot water. Trade visitors received a pair of pencils in a pencil pocket as a souvenir.

The Stearns Lumber Co., Boston, which mills greenhouse material from cypress cut in its own timber lands in the south, had a booth in which the Challenge ventilating apparatus was shown; also hotbed sashes and inch pieces sawn from sashbars, plates, etc. All the cypress was in its natural color, to show just what the material is. W. A. Bruce, Boston, had a booth to advertise his specialty, painting and glazing greenhouses.

Heating Apparatus.

Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, performed the somewhat unusual feat of carrying 1,100 miles a boiler weighing 1,200 pounds and setting it up in the trade display. The boiler has a capacity of 48,000 feet of glass. It was shown fitted with the firm's shaking and dumping grate and with the Kroeschell heat generator for putting the water under pressure. The boiler was connected up with a demonstration of the firm's system of threaded tube piping that enclosed the booth. Fred Lautenschlager was in charge. The big boiler was sold to John Barr, of South Natick.

American Auxiliary Heating Co., Boston, which recently took over the business of the W. W. Castle Co., showed two Castle circulators in operation, one driven by belt and the other connected directly with the motor by a shaft. The apparatus has been shown at many S. A. F. conventions. It is used to force circulation in hot water heating plants that for any reason do not have the desired rapidity of water movement. J. L. Congdon was in charge, as heretofore.

The American Blower Co., Detroit, had a booth to show the New Detroit return trap, with G. D. Millspaugh, who has attended many florists' conventions, in charge.

The Morehead Mfg. Co., Detroit, had a space reserved for the display of the Morehead return steam trap, but the exhibit was not in place at the hour of closing this report.

The Johnston Heating Co., New York, set up one of its large return flue, steel tubular steam boilers, with a water heater used for forced circulation of hot water. This is comparatively new. The heater takes live steam from the boiler and passes it around a set of coils that contain the water, which is then sent through the coils by a pump. J. F. Johnston was in charge.

Wm. Moll, Cleveland, showed the Ideal steam trap, the Ideal pipe clamp and the Bate evaporator for insecticides. The display was in charge of T. W. Moll and Guy Bate.

John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, western representatives. The Rumsey pumps were shown.

Miscellaneous Exhibits.

The Revere Rubber Co., Boston and half a dozen other cities, made an elaborate display of well-known brand of florists' hose. Rubber hose is a prosaic article, but that it still is possible to display it attractively the Revere people showed in their booth, a pergola entirely of hose. G. P. Whitmore was in charge.

The Boston Belting Co., Boston, had a booth in which were shown, in a pyramid of reels, over 9,000 feet of a new special florists' hose the company is getting out. Mr. Smith was in charge.

The Electric Hose and Rubber Co., Wilmington, Del., showed Electric hose and old-fashioned hose with water flowing through them. The latter leaked.

The New England Mineral Fertilizer & Chemical Co., Boston, had a booth for chemical fertilizers.

THE CARNATIONS.

Largest Showing Yet Made.

The American Carnation Society came to the front the fourth day of the show with the largest display of blooms in its history. The secretary had nearly 300 entries as against less than 200 at Pittsburg, where the previous high water mark was set last year. Several exhibits from the Pennsylvania carnation belt and westward failed to arrive, because of the heavy storm that interrupted travel. The quality of nearly all the stock was of the highest order, but there were some soft flowers and those that had come from the west were not in a condition to compete.

Aside from the rivalry for premiums, of course the greatest interest centered in the novelties. Nothing sensational was disclosed. The judges did not award the society's gold medal and gave both the silver and bronze to variegated sorts. M. A. Patten had the two leading varieties, Mrs. C. W. Barron, variegated, and Genevieve White, winner of the S. A. F. silver medal. Other new sorts of some promise included Pink Supreme, blush pink, from J. H. Leach & Son; Benora, variegated, from Peter Fisher; Mrs. B. P. Cheney, variegated, from John Barr; Howard Gould, pink, from Cottage Gardens; Rainbow, variegated, and Sultana, crimson, from Wanoka Greenhouses; William Eccles, red, from Scott Bros.; White Winsor, from H. F. Littlefield, Worcester, Mass.; pink sport of Winsor, from W. D. Howard; Dimple Weidener, from Wm. Kleinheinz, and Dorothy Dempster, white, from Robert Main, Gloversville, N. Y. From George Saltford, Poughkeepsie, came Vassar, another fine variegated, but it had heated in transit.

The new varieties being sent out this year were not conspicuous. Bonfire was shown by Hill. The Chicago Carnation Co. put up Washington, not for competition. Dorner showed White Wonder and Gloriosa, and Zweifel staged Bright Spot. C. H. Totty showed cut blooms and a strong potted plant of Wodenethe. Under number came a

THE ROSES.

Rose Society's Part Well Done.

Of the special flower societies cooperating with the S. A. F. in the National Flower Show it fell to the American Rose Society to set the pace for the others, the roses being put on for an opening attraction. If weather conditions interfered with the plantmen, the crop conditions were in favor of the cut flower men, for they had plenty of stock and staged it in far greater quantity than at any previous show in the history of the society. The display was in charge of Eber Holmes and was ably handled. The exhibits were not numerous, but were of extremely fine quality. The classes for Killarney and White Killarney, of course, brought out the keenest competition, there being nine entries in the former and six in the latter. Scarce as Beauties have been, there were five entries and it was a feather in the cap of Bassett & Washburn that their flowers, after having traveled 1,100 miles and been forty-eight hours in the box, should have taken second prize. Poehlmann Bros. Co. was second for White Killarney. These two were the only western exhibitors of roses.

Of special interest were the new roses, and they also were unusually numerous, although some of them, like Hill's Rose Queen and Totty's Hillingdon, were conspicuous by their absence, their owners using every bit of available wood for propagating. Most numerous were the sports of Killarney and White Killarney. These were shown by Robert Scott & Son, S. J. Reuter & Son, A. N. Pierson, F. R. Pierson Co., Waban Rose Conservatories and others. In practically every case they show an increase in the number of petals and added size of flower and vigor of growth. A. N. Pierson put up Prince de Bulgarie and Robert Scott & Son had Melody as a center of attraction for the growers looking for roses of a new color. Myers & Samtman showed a fine vase of Hilda, the deeper pink sport of Maryland, and there were several others that will be heard from at a later date.

The rose plants were an even greater feature than the cut roses. No such displays as those of Thomas Roland and M. H. Walsh have ever been seen in America. Walsh's plants were some of them nine feet high and literally smothered in bloom. He showed many of his own raising, but probably the best of them was Mrs. M. H. Walsh, double white with dark, lustrous green foliage; it gives every promise of taking a leading place among the ramblers. Mr. Roland staged his plants as a rose garden, with a pergola, and the beautifully flowered stock also clambering on walls and over fences. The arrangement, in its way, showed as high an order of skill as did the condition of the stock. These two exhibits would have been a sensational feature in any show less stupendous.

The Awards.

SWEET PEAS.

The National Sweet Pea Society put on an exhibition at Boston, March 28, that for number and quality of blooms was one of the surprises of the national exhibition. Of cut blooms there were only three exhibitors, but William Sim, of Cliftondale, Mass., put up no less than 13,000 flowers in more than a dozen varieties and including the whole range of colors. His flowers were all on stems fifteen inches long and created a sensation. Less extensive, but hardly less interesting, was the display of the Halifax Gardens Co. Anton Zvolanek also staged a large number of winter flowering varieties, including many new ones.

The judges were J. S. Brunton, Wm.

Duckham and C. H. Totty. They awarded to Mr. Sim eight first premiums for vases of 100 and seven firsts for vases of fifty of the separate colors. Mr. Zvolanek was first for fifty blue and for two classes for novelties, also second for fifty salmon pink. The Halifax Gardens Co. was second on three vases of 100 each. For eight distinct varieties, 100 of each, Wm. Sim was first, Halifax Gardens second. The same awards were made for ten distinct varieties, twenty-five of each, and for the Boddington prize for ten varieties, fifty of each. Mr. Sim won the Lord & Burnham gold medal for display of 1,000 blooms.

Three retailers competed for the prizes offered for work with sweet peas. On table decoration, Penn was first, MacMulkin second. On basket, Hoffman was first, the Boston Cut Flower Co. second. On bride's bouquet the Boston Cut Flower Co. was first and Penn second. Hoffman's basket was simply perfect in color, combination and arrangement.

NATIONAL SHOW MANAGEMENT.

The second National Flower Show was projected on the heels of the successful initial undertaking of this character, at Chicago, in November of 1908. The Society of American Florists, at its convention at Cincinnati the following August, authorized the second and larger exhibition, and for the purpose of organization for work a committee was appointed, consisting of F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y., chairman; Wm. J. Stewart, Boston; F. H. Traendly, New York; Robert Craig, Philadelphia; J. K. M. L. Farquhar, Boston; E. A. Stroud, Overbrook, Pa. This committee raised a guarantee fund of $10,050, with 110 subscribers, and at the same time appointed a committee, consisting of F. R. Pierson, W. A. Manda, Robert Craig, Thomas Roland, Robert Cameron and J. K. M. L. Farquhar, to prepare a schedule for a spring show. As soon as it was decided that Boston was the most available city for such an exhibition, a local board of control was appointed, consisting of F. R. Pierson, J. K. M. L. Farquhar, E. Allan Peirce, Thomas Roland and Patrick Welch. It was upon the latter committee that the greater part of the work fell. The committees decided to hold a trade display in connection with the show and placed this feature, and the general management of the exhibition, in the hands of Chester I. Campbell. James Wheeler was charged with staging the show and did his work well.

While the S. A. F. has organized the show, it has had the whole-hearted cooperation of all the special flower and allied societies, including the American Rose Society, American Carnation Society, Sweet Pea Society of America, American Gladiolus Society and National Association of Gardeners; also the Chrysanthemum Society of America and the Retail Florists' Delivery Association.

LOCAL HOSPITALITIES.

The hospitality of the Boston florists is proverbial, but on the present occasion the Gardeners' and Florists' Club outdid itself in the matter of providing pleasures for the trade visitors. The big event of the week was the reception and dance in Paul Revere hall, where one of the leading local caterers served to many hundreds of florists, gardeners and their ladies.

Tuesday afternoon, March 28, all the visiting ladies were taken for an auto trip through the parks of Boston. Wednesday afternoon a theater party was given for them at the Boston theater. Thursday, March 30, there will be a trip to Concord, stopping at the different historical points of interest along the way. Nothing could be of more interest in a historical way than traveling over this line of Paul Revere's ride with all the Revolutionary history in connection therewith. Luncheon will be served.

In addition to the program of local hospitalities, the Ladies' S. A. F. held a business meeting March 25 and arranged their week's program as follows: Auto rides Tuesday, morning and afternoon; theater party Wednesday; trip to Concord Thursday; reception by Mrs. W. H. Elliott at her home at Brighton Friday.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.New Officers.

President—A. Farenwald, Hillside, Pa.

Vice-president—Philip Breitmeyer, Detroit.

Secretary—Benj. Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y.

Treasurer—Harry O. May, Summit, N. J.

Executive committee—Eber Holmes, to succeed Philip Breitmeyer; W. R. Pierson, to succeed himself.

The American Rose Society held three sessions at Boston this week and had as successful a meeting as ever has been held by this compact body of enthusiasts. At the opening President

Mr. Elliott said that the present low price of glass might not be an unmixed good; he thought it responsible for the present season's enormous expansion in greenhouse area, which he said may be as great as in all the last five years, resulting in too sudden an increase in the supply and consequent demoralization of the cut flower market. He thought a different duty on imported glass might lead to more stable prices and minimize such danger. This led to a long discussion in which some twenty or more leading growers gave their views. Few saw any great danger of overproduction and several thought the present low price of glass a great gain, but many, and these included those who bought before the glass market struck its present low level, thought are highly desirable, but there was some difference of opinion as to whether merely designating the length of stem would accomplish the result desired; it was pointed out that other factors frequently determine the grade. A committee consisting of C. E. Meehan, H. O. May, Eber Holmes, Fred Burki, August Poehlmann, W. F. Kasting, W. F. Gude, W. R. Pierson, Philip Breitmeyer and Otto Koenig was appointed to bring a recommendation. At a later session Chairman Meehan reported recommending the adoption of a standard scale for grading in accordance with the length of stem, as follows: 6, 9, 12, 15, 18, 24-inch and higher as necessary. The committee reported its belief that the general use of such designation in place of the present names for grades will be a great help to the whole trade. The report was adopted.

Treasurer H. O. May made a financial report as follows:

Receipts	$7,665.00
Disbursements	7,277.01

Balance.....$ 487.99

Sixty-one life members have contributed a permanent fund of $3,050.

Secretary Hammond in his report told of the effort to reach the amateur rose growers and urged the extension of the effort. A committee consisting of S. S. Butterfield, Robert Simpson and Benj. Hammond was appointed to consider ways and means.

At the second session August Poehlmann, Chicago, read a short paper, "The Development of a Large Rose Growing Establishment," and answered numerous questions, stating in reply to one that his firm now employs about 265 men. W. R. Pierson read an exceptionally well written and meaty paper, "The Science of Rose Growing," and both essayists received votes of thanks. W. E. Wallace, of Dunstable, England, contrasted conditions and methods in England and America and was listened to with much interest.

The closing session was for the amateur section, for which papers had been prepared by R. Vincent, Jr., Rev. S. S. Sulliger and W. G. MacKendrick.

On the selection of place of next meeting, a vote was taken in favor of Detroit, but the executive committee was given power to fix date and place, it being the view that a joint meeting with the Carnation Society is desirable.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.Officers Elected.

President—J. A. Valentine, Denver.

Vice-president—Philip Breitmeyer, Detroit.

Secretary—A. F. J. Baur, Indianapolis.

Treasurer—Fred Dorner, La Fayette, Ind.

Director—Eugene Dailedouze, Flatbush, N. Y.

The directors of the American Carnation Society appreciated that there would be too much going on to permit the reading of long essays and cut its program to mere business meetings. The address of President Burki recommended consideration of a change in the scale of points for judging that will tend to encourage the development of fragrance and keeping quality. Secretary Baur reported a net gain of twenty-eight members during the year and Treasurer Dorner reported $2,475.35

George Asmus.
(President Society of American Florists.)

Elliott read an address which reviewed the development of the rose and the growth of the society. He recommended the extension of the work among amateurs, the holding of future exhibitions under the guarantee plan to assure financial success, the general trial of all the new roses now being exploited, the appointment of a committee to deal with the tariff on glass, and another to consider recommending the adoption of standard grades for cut roses based on the length of stem. All the recommendations were concurred in.

In referring to the tariff on glass, that more stable prices would be an advantage. The consensus of opinion was that the tariff has less influence on the price of glass than trade agreements and trade conflicts, and that florists have little influence on the tariff in any event. Nevertheless, a committee consisting of Robert Simpson, Fred Burki and Benj. Hammond was appointed to look into the possibilities of the subject.

As to designating the grades of roses by the inches of stem, it was the unanimous opinion that uniform grades to be recognized over the whole country cash or investments. The nomenclature committee reported the registration of sixteen seedlings and three sports during the year, also that the variety Viola Sinclair had been debarred from competition at this exhibition because it is not registered with the society.

The resignation of W. N. Rudd was accepted with regret and C. W. Johnson was nominated to fill the unexpired term, E. A. Stroud and Wm. Nicholson being nominated to succeed themselves.

Philip Breitmeyer invited the society to hold its next meeting at Detroit and urged that a joint date with the Rose Society be selected. After some discussion of the advantages and disadvantages of such a combined exhibition, the directors were instructed to confer with the executive committee of the Rose Society, to see what can be done.

At the opening session there was present J. S. Brunton, chairman of the Perpetual Flowering Carnation Society of England, also C. Engelmann and W. E. Wallace, leading carnation growers in England, each of whom made an address.

SWEET PEA SOCIETY.

The National Sweet Pea Society held a meeting at Boston, March 29, presided over by W. Atlee Burpee. Prof. A. C. Beal and Prof. John Craig reported on the society's trials of sweet peas at Cornell and papers were presented as follows: "Growing Sweet Peas Under Glass," by William Sim; "Latest Novelties in Sweet Peas," by G. W. Kerr.

TELEGRAPH DELIVERY.

The Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association held two sessions and made progress toward completing organization. H. B. Dorner resigned as secretary, because of pressure of other work, and Irwin Bertermann, of Indianapolis, was elected in his place. A committee consisting of J. A. Valentine, W. L. Rock, Irwin Bertermann, F. E. Palmer and W. J. Smyth was appointed to formulate certain changes in the by-laws, to simplify the guarantee fund feature and prepare a plan to put the association into active operation. A paper on credits was read by PRESIDENT BURKI'S ADDRESS.

[Delivered before the American Carnation Society, in convention at Boston, March 25 to April 1, 1911.]

I wish most heartily to express my appreciation of the work done by the members who have worked so faithfully for the success of this meeting and exhibition, and we jointly also should show our appreciation of the untiring efforts of our worthy vice-president, Mr. Peirce, and our able secretary, Mr. Baur.

Boston, the recognized center of horticulture, has acted as our host several times before. It is a pleasure to have the privilege of being here again, and I trust this meeting will be the best and most successful convention that we have ever had. The premiums offered at this convention are more liberal than at any of our former exhibitions; this is on account of our joining with this great flower show.

There are but few recommendations that I have to offer, as the ground has been well covered by our former president.

The most important matter that I wish you to consider is this: The society's scale of points for judging our exhibits. I especially refer to the seedlings or coming new varieties. It appears that we must rely on getting new varieties to take the place of those which we term standards, now grown. These seem to lose vigor in a few years under our present-day treatment. If we are going to keep up the popularity of the carnation, we must give more consideration to the keeping qualities, which, to my understanding, would mean substance. For fragrance we only allow five points, just as if it did not count at all. Should we not require fifteen points each for color, size, substance and fragrance, ten points each for calyx and form, and twenty points for stem, making a total of 100 points? This scale, to my judgment, would be more uniform than the percentage on which our judging has heretofore been made.

I recommend the appointment of a committee to take up the matter of judging, and to consider the scale of points on the percentage which I have just mentioned.

Is it not true that the carnation was made by the people the popular flower on account of its fragrance, keeping quality and reasonable price as compared with the rose?

I may add that some of our most prominent retailers care to handle but few carnations. In fact, they say that they would rather not handle them at all, on account of the many complaints they receive, to the effect that the carnation blooms which they sold to their customers had gone to sleep on the day they were purchased. We should give this matter our serious consideration, for the buyer of carnation blooms has a right to expect both fragrance and keeping qualities in them. It is too bad that we have been getting away from this in most of our present-day varieties.

Now that we have a Carnation Society button, we want to carry out the recommendation of our former president, Albert Herr—that each member greet and welcome anyone wearing the button, and also constitute himself a committee of one to secure new members to this society.

PRESIDENT ELLIOTT'S ADDRESS.

[Delivered before the American Rose Society, in convention at Boston, March 25 to April 1, 1911.]

The floral queen has called her subjects to convene in Boston once more. This is our twelfth annual convention and the third that has been held in this city. I am glad to welcome the American Rose Society, and all lovers of the rose, to Boston at this time. This meeting is under different conditions from any under which we have ever met before. We hope this will prove satisfactory to all who are attending and joining in the great work that we are here carrying on. It is a great thing to get together in this way and show the people what floriculture really means at the present time.

This is certainly a great exhibition. We have admired its beauties and the enterprise of the producers of the various lines exhibited here. The carnation, the orchid and the violet are contending for an advanced position, but no matter how strenuously the devotees of these various flowers may push forward their carnations, orchids or Dutch bulbs, we can feel assured that the rose will always lead, as commercial floriculture was born here, but for what we have done in all lines of horticulture, and I think we can safely say that Boston still leads in the line of ornamental horticulture.

The progress of our society has not always been satisfactory in regard to membership and finance. Our membership seems small when we read of the great Amateur Rose Society of England. It is a question as to how any society which is partly amateur and partly commercial can succeed along both lines. As far as I know, those societies making the great success across the water are purely amateur. We have always endeavored to develop the amateur side of our society, as well as the commercial. I hope that our amateur rose meeting here may be the beginning of an advancement of that branch of our society. I have found that the commercial rose grower always takes more interest in the amateur side of our society as he becomes more familiar with its general work and the aim and object of our society.

Future Exhibitions.

From a commercial standpoint our exhibitions in the past have been highly successful. The attendance and the general financial results have not always been so satisfactory. Our present exhibition is the first that we have ever had under these conditions, in connection with the other societies. In the future I should exhibitions that would interest the amateur and the commercial rose grower could be made to pay.

Never before has there been such a large number of new varieties of roses offered for our trial. All these varieties should be tried out thoroughly, but one grower cannot undertake to try out the whole number. He will select those that look best to him, and labor with those with the usual uncertain success. Let us hope, however, that these wonders of beauty and productiveness will largely increase the profits to all experimenters. The careful, arduous work that hybridizers have done for us certainly deserves our support.

Greenhouse Building.

Greenhouse building has gone ahead at the usual rate. Some new places of great promise have been added to our list and many additions made to the old. There seems to be no lack of enterprise among the growers in this line of work. What is going to be the effect and what will be the outcome of this low price of glass? It looks as if there would be as much greenhouse building done in the next year as has been done in the last five years. This increase of glass will bring a very large immediate increase of stock. What the effect of this production on the prices will be we do not know, but there seems to be some danger that the low price of glass may do us more harm than good. Is our supply really nearing our demand? Can we go ahead with safety with such a tremendous amount of building? It seems a question that should be considered at the present time.

Now is the time for our society, and kindred societies, to use their influence in regard to tariff rates. The tariff on glass has always been an unreasonable burden on the greenhouse men. The great variations in the prices during the last year have been such as to upset the glass business and the greenhouse business as well. Before our convention closes I should like to see a committee appointed to take up the matter of influencing Congress on this subject. Do not think that, because the price of glass is low at the present time, it is going to remain so.

Standard Grading of Roses.

A good many years ago, soon after the Society of American Florists was started, they took up the matter of standard pots and they settled it in such a satisfactory manner that no trouble has developed on that score since. A standard length or grade of cut flowers, with names that would have some definite meaning that could be understood by all, would be of a great deal more benefit to the trade than standard measurement of pots has ever been.

It seems strange, when the matter would be so simple, that no standard of grading or naming of the different grades of roses has ever been adopted. When one goes to New York they inquire what No. 1 sells for in Boston and what we get for fancies. It is just as clear as mud to the Boston grower. Why should roses be called firsts, seconds and thirds, A, B, C, fancies or extras, when it is just as easy to call them by their right names, so that everybody would understand? We have a nomenclature committee on roses and that sort of thing, yet we have no system of naming the different grades of roses under which any florist can send to another city and have any definite idea of what he will receive. The names of these different grades refer only to the length

W. Atlee Burpee.

(President of the National Sweet Pea Society, from a photograph made when visiting the late Henry Eckford, in England.)

it has from the first, and Boston can feel proud when she remembers that forty years ago the commercial flower business was here born. The mother of that business was the old Bon Silene, which stands proudly in our exhibition today and can feel proud, not only of her history, but of the fact that she pays just as well today as any of the newer and larger varieties. We are proud of our city; not because recommend that exhibitions be held under the guarantee plan, as is being done with this show. There are enough rose growers to put up a guarantee fund to finance the exhibition in some leading city where admission could be charged to the public and the society be in a position to pay its way. With the success of our national exhibitions, a guarantee fund could be produced without any trouble. I believe of stem, no two cities using the same names for the different grades, and in the same cities hardly any two grading the same way. One florist's No. 2 may be longer than the other florist's No. 1.

It certainly is no more trouble, in ordering roses, to mention 15-inch Killarney than it is to say "special Killarney," and it would be much more simple and systematic to write such orders. Why could we not call these roses by the length of the stem, 9-inch, 12-inch, 15-inch, 18-inch, 21-inch, 24-inch and so on, that anyone can understand and that anyone may use, and can also tell if he receives what he has ordered? I have used this kind of system for the last two years and it has proved quite satisfactory. I should like to have a committee appointed to take up this matter.

SECRETARY BAUR'S REPORT.

[Read before the American Carnation Society, in convention at Boston, March 25 to April 1, 1911.]

The year 1910 may well be considered a successful one for the American Carnation Society. The membership has made its usual slight gain. During the year 1910 we added fifty-seven new names, and against these we have twenty-eight on the delinquent list. Sixteen new names have been added since the first of this year. We now have 344 members in good standing.

Five deaths were reported during the year, namely: Lyman B. Craw, of New York; Mrs. W. J. Vesey, of Fort Wayne, Ind., who died April 8; W. E. Hall, of Clyde, O., who died May 3; Anthony Wiegand, of Indianapolis, Ind., who died December 19; Fred Dorner, of La Fayette, Ind., who died December 29.

For the funeral of Mr. Dorner, who was one of our early presidents, we ordered a wreath of carnations, costing $15, after having first secured the sanction of the president. Nine members of the A. C. S. attended the funeral services, which were held January 3.

Complying with instructions given by the last convention, we have had designed a permanent button. The design having been approved by the board of directors, we had 150 of them made, and we are pleased to state that most of them have been sold among our members. They were sold at a slight profit to the society, a wide distribution being more desired than a profit.

The premium schedule for this exhibition was gotten out in due time. We were able to secure slightly more advertising matter than was carried by last year's list, the amount being exactly thirty pages, amounting to $300.

The cost of printing the schedule ran slightly over $100 and we have deferred payment until this meeting approves the account.

This transaction is a violation of Section 6 of Article 2 of the constitution, and inasmuch as the cost of printing this schedule will vary in proportion to the amount of revenue it produces for the treasury, and as we expect and hope to see a recurrence of the same thing each year, we would recommend that the printing of the premium schedule be inserted in that clause which gives permission to spend over $100 for printing the annual report.

We would also recommend a change in Section 8 of the by-laws. We recommend that instead of compelling a delinquent member to pay up all arrearages, he be compelled to pay only one year's dues. This will cover the time we carried him on the books after the last payment of his dues. Or, that after a certain lapse of time he may be allowed to join as a new member.

Fred Burki.

(President American Carnation Society.)

The merging of our exhibition with the National Flower Show was perhaps responsible for most of the activity in the secretary's office. Just how much the society will be benefited, or otherwise, remains to be seen. The liberal premiums, coupled with the rule compelling membership in the A. C. S. of all competing exhibitors, has brought in several members—more than usually come in before the convention takes place.

The large increase in the total amount available for carnation premiums made it necessary to completely rearrange the schedule. The schedule, as it is this year, seems much more nearly perfect than any other we have ever had, in that it provides for a more complete exhibition of the carnation and its possibilities. If this list can be reduced without eliminating too many of the decorative features, it would be a step in the right direction.

To the National Flower Show Committee is due our thanks for placing at our disposal the generous sum of $750 to be used for premiums at this exhibition. This, added to our usual amount of cash, medals and special premiums, made the largest amount of premiums ever offered for carnations, totaling nearly $1,400. The large number of entries shows that the money was wisely distributed.

In conclusion, I wish to add that the society owes its thanks to our vice-president, E. A. Peirce, for the able manner in which he has handled the local end of the preparations.

CREDITS AND COLLECTIONS.

[A paper by President J. A. Valentine, read before the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, in convention at Boston, Mass., March 25 to April 1, 1911.]

In presenting to you this hastily prepared paper I wish to state that, while the words are mine, the paper is prepared from notes furnished me for that purpose by the secretary of our company, Miss Page, who has for years acted as our "credit man" in charge of accounts and collections. If the inner history of retail florists could be known, I firmly believe that it would show an astonishing number of failures due to the careless extending of credits and slovenly methods of collecting. Doubtless others have had problems to contend with that have not confronted us, and I hope that in the discussion on this paper many helpful points will be brought out.

In my opinion, many florists make the mistake of being timid about asking a man for references when he wishes to open a charge account. This is all wrong and it is hard to see why any such attitude should have become at all common. The man who goes to the bank to borrow money expects to thoroughly satisfy the bank on all points concerning his capital, his credits and his antecedents. The florist's transactions are smaller, but it is just as essential for him as for the bank to see that credits are not extended to people who will not pay. If the customer has good credit he is generally glad to prove it to you; and if he gets indignant over your courteous inquiries it is pretty safe to assume that he is one of the numerous gentry whose capital consists of gall and a good front.

Rating of New Customers.

In our establishment we get all the information we can, but when none is obtainable we are inclined to be fairly liberal in extending credit for small amounts, afterward following up the collections closely. During office hours all such matters are referred to the credit clerk, but salesmen are allowed some discretion in the early morning and in the evening. If the credit clerk has no record of a customer, the Retail Credit Men's Association, a local organization of which we are a member, and which includes about 200 retail merchants, is called on the 'phone and asked in regard to the customer's rating. If they have no record of him, we then obtain what information we can as to the customer's residence, business connection, etc., from the city and telephone directories, and if the information obtained from these sources looks fairly favorable and the amount involved does not exceed $3 or $4, the charge is allowed to go through; otherwise, unless we can get the customer on the 'phone and get a satisfactory reference from him, the goods are sent C. O. D. If the flowers ordered are for a gift, and the amount is not large, we take the chance and fill the order.

We have found that there can be no cast-iron rule in regard to these matters, but each case is determined by the circumstances and the information obtained. Often, on busy days, charges to entire strangers and people concerning whom we can get no information will slip through; but the results of sixteen years of this policy have led us to think it is better to risk an occasional loss than to offend or turn away people who might otherwise become good customers.

A Card File of Customers.

Our office record is kept as follows: When charges to new customers come into the office, their names, together with such information as we can get concerning them, is entered on a card. This is a 4x6 card printed so as to allow the following information: Name, address, occupation, report on credit from Dun's, Bradstreet's and the local Credit Association, and the date of such report; also whether it is a retail, wholesale or discount customer, and the date the card is filled out. These cards are filed alphabetically in a vertical card file. The lower part of these cards is so ruled that a small square is given to each month in the year, for a period of ten years. When an account is paid, the approximate amount of it, indicated by a series of letters of the alphabet, is entered in the square allotted to the month of the year in which the charge was made, together with figures showing the time taken in which to pay the amount—thirty, sixty, ninety days, etc.

This card becomes a valuable record of the way a customer pays his bills, and about how much he buys of us. This card file daily becomes of more value, not only in furnishing the names of our good customers to be used in connection with advertising matter, etc., but it enables us to know the people whom we have to push for collections, or fight shy of altogether. When it has been decided that we do not wish to give credit to a man, his index card is marked at the top with the letter R, so as to be seen at a glance.

File of Past Due Accounts.

For our daily information as to the condition of past due accounts, we keep another card file. This includes all accounts not paid in the month following the purchase. At the end of each month a card is made for each new past due account, and placed in this file, and it stays in the file until the account is paid or charged off to "Lost Accounts." This card shows the name, address, date and amount of the account. All memoranda relating to the collection of this account are entered on the card as soon as received, including date of letters written, promises of customer, reason, if any, for account being slow, etc. Each day this card file is checked with the cash book, and when an account is paid, or it becomes necessary to charge it off to "Lost Accounts," the card is taken out and destroyed. A file of this sort is a great help to the credit man, because it gives concisely the information in regard to the accounts which need his attention.

Methods of Collection.

At the end of each month an itemized statement is mailed of charges during the month, including past due account, if any; and a statement is also mailed of all those accounts which are past due and which have no charges during the current month. Duplicates of these last are made for the collector. Only past due accounts are given to him, unless there is some reason for feeling timid about some new account.

As a rule, accounts are given to the collector as soon as they are delinquent, but this is somewhat governed by the customer's credit rating as shown by our records. Past due accounts of old customers who have been in the habit of paying promptly are not given to a collector the first month after they become past due. This is also true of the most of our lady customers. We have found it to be good policy to be a little slower about sending a collector to lady customers than to the men, for the ladies seem unable to consider the business question involved without reference to their personal merits. The collector is urged to secure a promise of payment on a definite date, and not to be content with a promise to pay "soon." He then makes it a point to call for the money on the date set.

Treatment of Delinquents.

After the collector has had an account for a couple of months and it is still unpaid, a courteous letter is sent calling the customer's attention to the fact that the account is unpaid, and that a check will be appreciated. We use no form letters, as from experience we have found that it is better to make a personal appeal suited to each particular case. If this letter brings no results, what shall be done with the account depends on the circumstances of the case, the customer's standing in the community, his apparent worth and his local credit rating. Sometimes we have found it good policy to be patient for a number of months and coax a customer along, retaining his good will and finally educating him into paying his bills promptly. Sometimes customers let small accounts run month after month simply because the amount in-involved is small. If the bookkeeper deliberately adds a dollar or two to this man's statement it will often bring him into the office in a wrathful mood, with sarcastic comments on your system of bookkeeping. Proper apologies are made, the bill is corrected, and the right amount collected. There are said to be tricks in all trades, and this is one of them. Its success shows that the customer had not overlooked the account, but was willfully neglecting it.

Credit Associations.

Our two local credit associations are of great assistance to us. One is called the Retail Credit Men's Association, the other the Denver Credit Men's Association. The first is an association of retail merchants, the members of which send in to the secretary of the association daily reports of their slow-paying and bad accounts, also their new accounts. The association keeps no record at all of a man's worth, but simply of the way he pays his bills to the members of the association. This information is available at any minute over the telephone.

The Denver Credit Men's Association is more in the nature of a collection agency. It furnishes us with two form letters, which are mailed by us, but with the signature of the association. The first states that the account has been given to the association for collection and asks that it be settled at once. The second letter, which is sent out about ten days after the first, states that if the account is not paid at once it will be necessary to include the delinquent in the monthly report to members of the association. These letters are not used until the collector has exhausted his resources. If the second letter brings no results, we give up the account as practically hopeless, charge it off to "Lost Accounts" and give it to a regular collection attorney, with instructions to sue if it seems advisable.

Use of Sight Drafts.

When a delinquent customer resides outside the city of Denver, if letters fail to bring results, we notify him that draft will be made on him on a certain date. If he does not pay by that date, draft is made on him in the regular way through our bank. If no attention is paid to the draft, or it is refused, we then attempt to make collection through what is called the Credit Association. This is a New York concern which is also in the nature of a collection agency. There is a series of two dunning letters, and if these bring no result a draft, on a form furnished by the association, is sent to the bank designated by it in the town in which the customer lives. Attached to the draft is a letter to the association's attorney in that town, asking him to proceed with the collection of the account. If the draft is not paid through the bank, the account is then given by the bank to the attorney.

We also keep in our office a card file of all accounts which have been charged off as lost, and which are not outlawed, bankrupt or gone out of business. The card shows in whose hands the account is at the present time. If the account is in the hands of an attorney the card shows that fact. The other accounts are simply carried along in the file in the hope of sometime locating the customer who has changed his address and disappeared. These cards are looked over periodically, any further steps which seem advisable are taken to enforce collection, and as fast as an account is paid or outlawed, the card is taken from the file and destroyed.

The Notoriously Slow Payer.

We sometimes get an account against a man who is notoriously bad pay—and generally for a small amount. In such cases our collector is instructed to be very persistent and, if the account is not paid, to continue to annoy the man even in the presence of his customers in his own office. The object of such methods is not the collecting of this account, for the small sum is not worth all the trouble, and often we do not collect the account at all, but the next time that man wants flowers he will avoid us and go to some concern whose collection methods are less offensive, and we are well rid of him. There seems to be a sort of fraternal feeling among men of this style, who are continually living beyond their means, and they evidently pass the word along to their cronies that we are mean and persistent in our collecting. We think that such a reputation among men of this sort is worth striving for.

On the other hand, when a man comes to the office with a story of sickness or genuine misfortune, we are glad to arrange for such extension of time as his necessities require—only asking that he make his promises of future payment as specific as possible. Misfortune sometimes turns into fortune and you will sometimes retain the good will of a man by considerate treatment and later find him a prompt and valuable customer.

The policy, as herein outlined, is the same practically that we have followed for a number of years; but the detail is a matter of growth, and has been carefully thought out from time to time to meet the demands of our particular business and line of customers. We are always seeking to improve our methods, and read all available literature on the subject.

Wisdom of Prompt Collections.

We have found that few accounts are lost if they are followed up promptly, but that a slow account can quickly become worthless if the debtor is allowed to think that you are easy and negligent in such matters. Years ago I was repeatedly cautioned by well-meaning friends that any attempt to follow up accounts and make prompt collections would result in driving away from us our most desirable trade. It is true that some customers have taken exception to our sending their bills by our collector and some few of them have temporarily withdrawn their patronage. The most of these have eventually returned to us with the knowledge that we make prompt collections and they are generally models of promptness. Some few have never returned, but are now adding to the burden of overdue accounts carried by our competitors.

We have just adopted the plan of sending a letter with the first statement of account sent a new customer, expressing pleasure at finding his name among our charge accounts, promising him good service, hoping to please him, etc.—in short, extending him the glad hand and making him feel that he has his own identity in the office.

The collection and bookkeeping department is a necessary expense and if it can help to draw trade or hold it when once secured it will thereby help to pay its own way. The value of any system must be judged by the results obtained. I will simply state that by following the plan outlined above we have, for the last five years, collected an average of $996 out of every $1,000 charged.

The retailers of the country can be vastly benefited by an exchange of thoughts and experiences in such gatherings as this. The growers have long met in conventions and made rapid progress in their end of the florists' business by reason of such exchanges. To hold that your business knowledge is too valuable to exchange with your competitor is only a little less antiquated than viewing each competitor as an enemy; and to consider one's self too well posted to be able to learn anything in a gathering of this sort stamps one as narrow and provincial. Let us give freely and hold ourselves ready to receive and retain the good points advanced. If each one can advance one good point, all will be vastly benefited, for each will have parted with one valuable idea and will receive a great many in return.

SCIENCE OF GROWING ROSES.

[A paper by Wallace R. Pierson, of Cromwell, Conn., read before the American Rose Society, in convention at Boston, Mass., March 25 to April 1, 1911.]

Upon receipt of the invitation from your society to speak upon this subject, I had an interview with Webster's dictionary to find out just exactly what science means; and upon learning that science, as applied to the subject at hand, means the assemblage of the general principles of rose growing, I accepted the invitation, for the word had lost much of its dread, and I felt much as the Yale student did, according to the story so often told. This student was to take an examination in Bible history, and he came to the conclusion that he ought to learn the names of the kings of Israel and thus be prepared for the coming examination. Imagine his surprise when he was asked to criticise the acts of Moses! After thinking the matter over he wrote as follows, and his answer was enough to pass him in his examination: "Far be it for one as humble as I to criticise the acts of a great man like Moses, but if you want to know the names of the kings of Israel, here they are." And he wrote out the list that he had so carefully learned. So I am availing myself of the chance to present to you a collection of the general principles of rose growing, and trust that in doing so I may carry out the instructions of our president, who has asked me to bring before you certain subjects which are in dispute and to give my opinion regarding these points, in the hope that an interesting and profitable discussion may arise therefrom.

The method of growing roses today is built upon the knowledge that has been gained in the past by experience, and many times the lessons have been costly, but it is by mistakes that we learn, and by observing the self-evident disclosures that nature makes we can profit.

The Question of Soil.

In considering first the question of soil, I want to quote to you a little of what is now ancient history—information that has been handed down to me, because these points were observed before my day as a rose grower. About twenty-five years ago we were using almost entirely soil from uplands that had a clay body, but contained some lighter elements. This, composted with manure, was our rose soil. One year part of our place was planted with soil taken from the lowlands, where at times there was standing water. This lowland soil produced better roses than we were getting from the same varieties, under the same treatment, when the upland soil was used. The variation was so marked, and so strikingly in favor of this lowland soil, that we believe it is far better suited to roses than the upland soil. It is true that our wild native roses exist on uplands but the rank, strong-growing wild roses are always to be found in swamps, or in low, marshy land. These same lowlands, through the wash from the surface of the soil in years past, have accumulated a richness and character that are not found in soil at higher levels.

About the same time we were trying to combat club-root, which is caused by eelworm, and the noticeable fact that the eelworm did not exist in soil that at some time in the year was under water had much to do with our selection of lowland soil for roses. The eelworm proposition had also another influence which has been far-reaching in its effect, and brings up the proposition of young stock, which is one of the most serious importance.

Grafted or Own-root Stock?

At this time we were growing La France, and, running short of enough to fill a house of own-root plants of this variety, we purchased enough imported, grafted plants to fill the house. The eelworm attacked part of the own-root plants, but the grafted plants were not affected at all, although the own-root plants adjoining them were affected. The best and strongest growth we had ever been able to get, and the greatest producing plants, were the

There are, however, a few exceptions, and the noticeable exceptions are Perle, Sunrise and American Beauty.

Speaking of grafted plants, there are several points worthy of mention before we pass over the subject. The old method of gauging the value of a plant by the size of the pot which contains the roots has little worth, and deservedly, for the reason that a well nourished and properly grown plant in a 2¼-inch pot can be the equal, or the superior, of a plant poorly nourished that has been forced into a 3-inch pot before the shift is necessary, and this same rule applies to plants on their own roots. Make your plants strong and sturdy, with plenty of root action, and do not shift too soon. Get the size and growth in the small pots and, if you are shipping plants, save the buyer from paying express charges on surplus soil.

Hints on Grafting.

Be sure of your union of scion and stock, and, with the increase in the planting of varieties having hybrid blood in them, with a tendency to sluggishness in midwinter, a safe way to get good unions is to graft when the sap flows freely. Graft such varieties

A plant that is properly grafted, and with a perfect union, will live just as long and do more business than an own-root plant, and the fact that those who are the best growers in this country are grafting roses because it pays them is proof of the assertion I make, and I am willing to allow the own-root advocates all the bottom breaks they can get from their own-root plants, but I have yet to see as many bottom breaks per plant in an own-root house as we had last year in a carried-over house of grafted Killarney.

Leaving, then, the discussion of plants, let us return to the soil and the preparation of a house for planting. We try to lay composts in the winter, and for many reasons, one of which is that the ground is frozen and we can get our soil out from the lowlands better on frozen ground, the soil having been plowed into ridges in the fall, and another reason is that in winter we can secure cow manure to compost with the soil, and can at that time lay our composts within easy reach of the houses that are to need it later.

Use of Bone in Soil.

As soon as the frost is out we cut this soil over, mixing the manure with it, which hastens the decomposition of the vegetable matter in the turf, and when ready to fill the houses we use a two-horse Cutaway harrow to pulverize the soil, at this time adding bone meal, or rather a bone tankage, in the proportion of a pound of bone meal to each cubic foot of soil, or as near that as we can. I am aware of the fact that many do not use bone, and had our results been confined to an experience with one certain grade of bone, we should not be using bone; this bone, I would state, was thirty per cent phosphoric acid, according to analysis, with no nitrogen. This phosphoric acid was not available, and the results were no better than had so much lime been added to the soil. In time, perhaps, such a bone might have returned interest on the money, but it seemed to prove the old farmer's statement that the man who can afford to use bone should do so, as he is preparing the land for his grandchildren. However, a bone tankage with available phosphoric acid, and some nitrogen, will show results, and mulching young stock in small pots will soon prove this if my assertion is doubted. And I might add that part of our success in producing large, strong plants from 2¼-inch pots has been due to mulching each individual plant with a mixture of soil and bone.

One thing to be sure of in planting is that the union is covered, and often this is a problem when shallow rose benches are used, but to insure bottom canes, and to protect the plant from breakage, the union must be covered, and for that reason we graft our stocks as close to the pot as possible.

Given, then, a good plant, well established and growing, and a compost of lowland soil, with one-third cow manure that has been pulverized, and after adding bone tankage in the proportion of one pound to the cubic foot, we have two of the essentials of good rose growing.

Benches or Solid Beds?

I wish now to take up the consideration of solid beds and benches as an important question in rose growing, and you will note that I am entirely omit-grafted plants in that house of La France. The lesson was plain. We grafted our Bride and Bridesmaid, and since then we have been grafting roses. Own-root plants are grown only occasionally as a check on the grafted, and in every case the grafted have given us increased production, with a corresponding increase in revenue. In some cases two full crops have been cut from grafted plants before those on their own roots have attained sufficient size to throw a crop of salable flowers.

as My Maryland and Prince de Bulgarie early in the season, or wait until later in the year, when, with the warm weather and more sun, the sap begins to flow normally. Keep above the wood with blackthorns, for that wood seldom has the right amount of sap and seldom makes a good union. If the foregoing varieties were grafted when the wood was right, there would be less heard of this type of rose doing better on their own roots than they do as grafted plants.

ting the consideration of the house, for good roses can be grown in any house that has sun and air, although for economy in handling the large houses are to be preferred.

There are two methods of preparing a house; one is to build wooden or cement benches, and the other to construct solid beds. The purpose for which these are to be used at other times, if they are not to be used all the year for growing roses for cut flowers, has much to do with coming to a decision as to which to put in. Wooden benches we believe to be absolutely essential for young plants in small pots; the root action is better and the convenience of handling is a desirable qualification, but for the commercial production of cut roses a solid bed is, in my opinion, to be preferred, and we are using it almost exclusively.

Our method of constructing a solid bed may be of interest to some. Our subsoil is a clay, impervious to water to any extent, and thus devoid of drainage. We make the sides of our beds of cypress plank or of cement, and these sides are fourteen inches high above the level of the ground. We cut into the clay subsoil, leaving the bottom V-shaped, and in this trench lay a 2-inch or 2½-inch common land tile, according to the length of the bed, with a sod over each union. These tiles drain to cross tiles, which are the outlets. We then fill the bed with coarse gravel to within eight inches of the top of the boards or cement.

The Production of Blooms.

The beds are then ready for our soil, which is prepared as I have described. We use six inches of soil, and the two inches left between the top of the plank and the soil will allow for watering and mulching the beds from time to time. Good drainage is assured, and good drainage means air in the soil, for air is essential to root formation.

Given, then, a good plant, well established and growing, and a solid bed such as I have described, there are two methods in use to build up a plant before beginning to cut. One of these is to pinch all the new canes soft, and the other method is to allow these canes to mature, and then to cut back to a good length when the bud shows color. Of the two methods the latter seems more satisfactory, as a plant is built lower and the breaks will come stronger.

The question of how many cutting leads a plant should carry is important. Too much wood and too many shoots often mean small flowers, and the number of leads can be controlled by taking out the weaker ones, leaving six or seven to each plant. This does not mean six or seven bottom canes, but that number of growths which will produce flowers, and seven flowers per plant per crop is enough to insure a paying proposition and a good quality of bloom.

Cropping or Continuous Cutting?

Having covered the subject up to the mature plant in the bench or bed, the next feature to consider is cropping or continuous cutting. Two ways are open, and there is a question as to which is to be preferred. By cutting back or pinching soft, a bench of plants can be brought into crop as a whole, or by pinching one shoot per week on each plant so far as is practicable, the crop can be made continuous. For a holiday it is sometimes preferable to crop a section, or a bench, but for steady trade the continuous crop seems to be preferred. The plant never gets the severe check that cutting off an entire crop will give it, and the returns may be ahead at the end of the season. In this case the treatment will be different, and the extremes of watering will need to be avoided.

Watering is also one of the essentials, and the use of water, or the failure to use it, has changed the output of many sections of rose houses. The rule is to water sparingly when wholly off crop, and water at least three times per week, and when the plants are coming into crop always water thoroughly, but remember that if a bench is cropped when you cut from the top the root action suffers correspondingly, and, with less foliage, less water should be given.

When the Plants Are Off Crop.

Air is essential to root formation. Did you ever notice that the largest root a plant has is the one that comes things, water it. Liquid manure with some muriate of potash will help, but care in using these is essential, because they are dangerous things in the hands of incompetent help.

For roses that are to be left in year after year there is nothing better than the solid bed and a thorough drying out in the summer before cutting back. The question of how much to cut back a plant is important. Cut no more than is absolutely necessary if your plant has not been thoroughly rested. Never dry a plant so the wood will shrivel, and do not try to lift plants to replant from solid beds unless they have been thoroughly dried out. As a rule, roses lift better for replanting from benches than they do from solid beds, as in solid beds the roots are deeper.

The question of removing the soil from the top of a bed after drying it out is one that is of interest, and I firmly believe that taking off soil except that which has been washed to the center of the bed, and is loose, is unnecessary work and labor wasted.

For Midsummer Blooming.

To be a successful rose grower is not all there is to being a successful floket is usually supplied with poor stock at that time. How to remedy this has been a problem until the coming of new varieties, which have their places just as assuredly as Killarney has its place.

Should we put ourselves in the places of the retailers and dictate what we should grow, it would not be all Killarney and White Killarney. The early planting of other varieties, which have their strong points in spring, summer and fall, will tide over the situation, and the returns will be found highly satisfactory. To cite only one case, and that is My Mary, 5,700 plants produced 120,000 blooms during July and August of this last year, and made a creditable showing the balance of the year. Without these flowers we would have been almost without roses, and have disappointed not only our customers, but their customers, who love the beautiful, and whose love for the beautiful has made the florists' business what it is today. Give them novelty; give them variety; and the reward of increased business is sure to follow.

NOVELTIES IN SWEET PEAS.

[A paper by G. W. Kerr, of Philadelphia, Pa., read before the National Sweet Pea Society, in convention at Boston, Mass., March 25 to April 1, 1911.]

Not so many years ago, if one mentioned sweet pea novelties, it was quite unnecessary to ask the raiser's name, as they were then practically all the result of the patient and painstaking labor of the late Henry Eckford, but of recent years, more especially since the introduction of that glorious variety Countess Spencer, all this is changed, as the last six years have seen the advent of many sweet pea specialists and raisers, with the result that our list of varieties is growing by leaps and bounds—so much so that were they all distinct it would be almost an impossibility to keep in touch with them. But as it is, only a few of the many novelties which are introduced each year are found worthy of a permanent place in the garden, the majority of the novelties being either synonymous with existing varieties or in many cases inferior.

For instance, we are trying out at Fordhook this year considerably over 100 of the season's introductions, and I fancy I am safe in saying that there will not be twelve out of that number which will be found worthy of perpetuating. As far as we can judge by newspaper reports, the most sensational English novelties of the year are Stirling Stent and Charles Foster. Stirling Stent is a waved, orange-colored flower, for which the introducer has been charging 7 shillings and 6 pence, or almost $2, for six seeds. It was awarded a first-class certificate and the silver medal of the English Sweet Pea Society, as being the most meritorious novelty in their trials. Charles Foster is said to be the first of quite a new shade in sweet peas and is described as a blending of rose, salmon and apricot on a lavender and violet ground. Both these varieties are of immense size and generally produced four on a stem. After having read such glowing reports of their merits, I am eagerly looking forward to the advent of their first flowers some two and a half months hence.

out of the hole in the pot, and that the largest roots are nearest the edge? Air, with sufficient moisture, seems to be the reason for this. Thus, by withholding water when plants are off crop, the new roots get a chance, and the new crop comes strong and heavy; when it does come, feed it; above all rist, for there is the business side to consider and the retailers must be taken care of, and that means a steady supply of such stock as they may need. Not all of the money in roses is made during midwinter and the spring months. We have a long summer, when good roses are in demand, and the mar-easily takes first place. In fact, I consider it the most exquisitely beautiful variety in cultivation, the color being soft, light terra cotta on cream ground. Of the other novelties, the only varieties of outstanding merit were Mrs. Hugh Dickson, soft pink on cream ground; Martha Washington, white edged and suffused rose; W. T. Hutchins, buff, pinkish apricot; Earl Spencer, or Nancy Perkins, salmon-orange; Marie Corelli, rose; Ruby, glowing orange-scarlet, wings rose, and Arthur Unwin, a much improved Mrs. Ireland. If we add the following, the cream of the earlier Spencer novelties, this may be said to embrace the very finest set now in commerce, namely: Mrs. Routzahn, apricot pink and creamy buff; Constance Oliver, a cream ground Countess Spencer; Dainty Spencer, white with a picotee edging of rose; Mrs. C. W. Breadmore, or Evelyn Hemus, primrose with picotee edging of pink; White Spencer; Primrose Spencer; Asta Ohn, soft lavender, standard flushed pale rose; Tennant Spencer, heliotrope; John Ingman, or George Herbert, rosy carmine; Helen Lewis, deep orange; Florence Morse Spencer, pale pink; Othello Spencer, deep maroon; King Edward Spencer, rich crimson; Flora Norton Spencer, pale blue; Aurora Spencer; Queen Victoria Spencer; Coccinea Spencer, and—last but not least—Countess Spencer, the forerunner of this magnificent new race.

The New Winter Spencers.

So much for this popular flower as we know it in the summer time, but what of our winter flowering varieties? After having admired the magnificent exhibits of roses, carnations and other winter and spring flowers exhibited at the show, you may imagine I am a rash and false prophet when I say that there is a race of winter flowering sweet peas coming that will to a great extent oust many of these from popular favor, and that their introduction will revolutionize the cut flower market! I am referring to the Spencerized type of winter blooming sweet peas. Although the winter flowering type as we have it today is extremely popular, it is still in its infancy and the new race to which I refer is as much superior to it as are the summer flowering Spencers to the grandifloras, and all sweet pea lovers appreciate this marked difference, but I believe it is even more accentuated in the new winter Spencers.

E. Allan Peirce.

(Member Board of Control, National Flower Show)

I had the pleasure of visiting Mr. Zvolanek at Boundbrook a few days ago, where I saw this new class in perfection. There were pure white, primrose, blush pink, pink in various shades to rose and orange. The size of flowers and the excellent frilled blooms, strong stems and robust and vigorous growth to which I was introduced were magnificent and I am certain the introduction of this new race will place the sweet pea at the forefront of all winter flowers, especially for table decorations and boutonnieres.

I understand that the Rev. Edwin Arkwright, of Algiers, has also been working on this form. I have also been hybridizing for the same results for the last few years, so that we have now at Fordhook a large family of promising youngsters of various ages, from which I am expecting great things.

Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.—Benjamin Hammond, of Hammond's Paint & Slug Shot Works, celebrated the opening of his finely equipped new factory by inviting the school children of the community to visit the premises on Saturday afternoon, March 11, and by treating the youngsters to Florida oranges. Hundreds of the pupils attended, in company with their teachers, and found the tour of inspection not only instructive, but highly enjoyable, in spite of the fact that one of the boys dropped, feet first, into a barrel and was immersed to the waist in green paint.

OBITUARY.

David Mundell.

David Mundell, gardener at the Institution for Feeble Minded in Glenwood, Ia., died recently at his home in that town, as the result of cancer. He was born at Yonkers, N. Y., and was about 50 years of age. He was employed for fourteen years at the Hospital for the Insane at Independence, Ia., and then he removed to Monticello, Ia., where he engaged in business for himself. About two years ago he received the appointment at the Glenwood institution.

Mrs. George Schwartz.

Maria Theresa Schwartz, wife of George Schwartz, a retired wholesale florist of Brooklyn, N. Y., died March 21 at her home, 36 Schaeffer street, Brooklyn, at the age of 78 years. She was born in Germany, came to this country fifty-three years ago and had lived in Brooklyn for forty-one years. She is survived by her husband.

A. J. Seiders.

A. J. Seiders, one of the best landscape gardeners in Texas, died March 21 at the family residence, 1106 West Thirty-eighth street, Austin, at 40 years of age. He had suffered from consumption for five years, but had been confined to bed for only a short period. He was born in Austin and had lived there nearly all his life. He was a man of close observation and original thought. As a landscape gardener he knew the native plants and conditions and possessed good taste in arrangement. Texas owes him much as an introducer of plants and ideas that have become established successes in the peculiar climate of that state.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Edward Seiders; by his widow and six children, Misses Myrtle, Stella, Kate and Bessie, and Charley and A. J. Seiders, and by five brothers, J. D. and H. B. Seiders, of Taylor; John W. and R. L. Seiders, of San Saba, and Fred Seiders, of Austin.

Herman Lawrentz.

Herman Lawrentz, who for many years conducted greenhouses on the Torrington road, Litchfield, Conn., died March 17 of heart disease, at the age of about 70 years. He was apparently in good health when he retired to bed the previous evening.

Miss Fannie M. Anderson.

Miss Fannie M. Anderson, of the firm of Anderson & White, at Lexington, Ky., died March 20. The two ladies, Miss Anderson and Miss White, had been associated in business at 159 Georgetown street for many years and had built up a large trade from a small beginning. Miss White attended to the general management of the business, while Miss Anderson acted in the capacity of clerk and took charge of the orders. Miss White has the sympathy of her many friends in the death of her partner.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market has shown practically no change in the last week. Receipts continue heavy in all departments. A comparatively small part of the supply is taken by the stores of recognized standing and that are willing to pay a price. Business is not bad with the retailers, and they are able to buy so reasonably that they are pushing for business because of the extra profit to be had at this time, but the fact is that the greater part of each day's cut finds its outlet through the people who operate the cheap sales. Whenever it becomes generally known that cut flowers of good quality are to be had at cheap prices so long as the buyer is willing to take what is offered him and clean up the lot, there at once springs up a host of buyers who are not seen in the market when crops are low. These people have been operating extensively in the last two weeks and have served to give the market a somewhat better tone. They do not care whether they handle roses, carnations, sweet peas, violets or bulb stock—it is all one to them. Were it not for these people there would be no possibility of moving the enormous quantity of stock which comes into the Chicago market when crops are on. It is recognized by everyone that when crops are at the heaviest with the growers who supply this market, cuts also are at the heaviest in the towns that otherwise would draw a part of their supply from here. Consequently when crops are on at Chicago the legitimate shipping demand is apt to be lightest, and vice versa.

There are so many flowers in the market that if anything is scarce its absence passes unnoticed; the buyer who personally visits the market does not get beyond the first place entered; all his wants are supplied at once. The average quality of cut flowers is excellent. Long Beauties are not yet in crop, but the special grades of other roses are so plentiful that there really is no special demand for Beauties. Also the buyers are out of the habit of ordering Beauties; they have been scarce so long that retailers are afraid to take orders for them. Carnations are good and sweet peas are coming in of superlative quality. Not much can be said for violets, as their season is passing.

Orchids continue abundant and the growers of these and of valley are looking for the passing of Lent for a revival in the wedding demand.

All kinds of greens are plentiful.

Easter Prospects.

With cut flowers as abundant as in the last fortnight there is much speculation as to the prospect for Easter. The growers, who are prone to look on the dark side, predict that crops will be run off and that there will be a scarcity for the great flower holiday. It seems inevitable that with crops so heavy as they have been in the last fortnight, they must be lighter for Easter. It seems, however, that there is little prospect of any scarcity—such scarcity as there may be will be of strictly high grade flowers—there will be plenty of the lower grades. Easter lilies with many growers have come in too soon and there will be many held for Easter which would have been marketed earlier had there been any chance to do so. With many growers' giganteums are short in stem, but the stock now on the market seems to indicate a fair proportion will be long-stemmed. The violet situation is in doubt. There should be plenty, but what the quality will be no one can tell, as hot weather for the last two or three days will make a great difference.

Locally this year there will be more bulb stock in pans, and that sort of thing, than there ever has been before. Many who grow bedding plants are preparing to supply local retailers with the more easily grown varieties of pot stock.

Friday evening, and informal talks were made by W. N. Rudd, J. C. Vaughan and H. N. Bruns for Chicago, and by J. Brown, W. A. Cull and C. Engelmann for the visitors. J. S. Brunton, leader of the party, was unable to be present on account of sickness. The other members are E. Barker, J. S. Gunn, L. M. Graves, G. Prickett, C. Pratley, S. South and J. Simpson.

After a visit to the wholesale market Saturday morning, John Poehlmann escorted all except Messrs. Brunton and Simpson out to Morton Grove, where the rest of the day was spent. The two last named gentlemen were taken on an auto trip through the west side parks by Mr. Bruns. Returning downtown they joined the rest of the party and Mr. Cull, in speaking about the plant of Poehlmann Bros. Co., said, "That establishment takes the cake."

They left for Niagara Falls Sunday afternoon and many remarks were heard that "they were jolly good fellows."

George C. Weiland is building eleven new houses, replacing seven old ones, at his place at Evanston, and his brother is building ten at New Castle.

Zech & Mann say quite a few of their customers are ordering Bridesmaid in preference to Killarney, the former having the advantage of both size and color.

M. C. Gunterberg does not plan to move to the new location at 82 to 86 East Randolph street until after Easter. Following this largest of years, the intention is to branch out a bit next season.

A. L. Vaughan says the total sales of Vaughan & Sperry for the month of March have beaten last year's record in spite of Easter being in March last year.

E. C. Amling is expected home from California early in April, all gingered up for the Easter rush.

Sinner Bros. are preparing to bench 1,000 Carnation Washington for trial next season.

C. M. Dickinson, at E. H. Hunt's, is hard at work on a new supply catalogue that is to be the largest the house has issued.

Harry Manheim says he is looking forward to a good summer demand and that Hoerber Bros. are preparing quite a line of summer stock.

O. J. Friedman is one of those concerned in the recent deal involving the Thompson-Taylor building on Michigan avenue, in the wholesale district.

Peter Olsem, of the Chicago Carnation Co., did not go to Boston with the main Chicago delegation. He remained until March 27 and took with him 1,000 carnation blooms for exhibition.

Kyle & Foerster say they feel sure that, in spite of the fact that so many growers were too early with their lilies, there will be more than ever for Easter,

"Killing two birds with one stone" is accomplished by the Geo. M. Garland Co. in an addition to their workshop, which is now being built at Des Plaines. The new building is a 34-foot truss house with a concrete wall, adjoining the present factory, a sheet metal roof and a glass wall on the east side giving ample light. This company is thus able to show the Garland truss construction and make good use of the house at the same time.

The city election takes place April 4. Peter Reinberg, who now is putting in every wakeful hour to elect Carter Harrison mayor, will then have time to consider greenhouse building. He has several hundred boxes of glass on the place.

Phil Schupp says J. A. Budlong expects to move into the new store at 82 to 86 East Randolph street April 1 and 2 and open for business there April 3.

E. E. Pieser is again in the store of Kennicott Bros. Co., he and Mrs. Pieser having returned from West Baden. It is difficult to get Mr. Pieser to forget business and while away he visited a number of customers within a few hours' ride of the Indiana resort.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

There was a great deal of clear weather last week, just warm enough to bring out all seasonable stock in large quantities. The retail trade is reported rather dull in everything except funeral work, which is plentiful and calls for especially large designs.

The plantsmen are, of course, all busy now and will be until the middle of May. On Monday morning, March 27, the wholesale market was glutted with extra fine sweet peas in all varieties; these are selling as low as $1.00 per thousand. Carnations, too, are much too plentiful in the market; every one had large consignments all week, quality extra fine, and large lots sold at $10 per thousand for extra good stock. Fancy Enchantress and Beacon sold well at top prices.

Lilies are coming in large lots, both callas and Harrisii, and sell as low as $10 per hundred. Roses are coming in fine. Bride and Maid are of especially good quality just now, but Killarney and Maryland outsell them and at a better price. Long, fancy Beauties are scarce; medium and short stems are plentiful.

California violets are holding up well, but are much smaller. Fancy smilax and common ferns had a good call and are plentiful.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

"Philadelphia leads in prizes." That was the message that came flashing over the wires from Boston on the night of March 25. It means that at the National Flower Show, where every section of the country is striving for honors and glory, Philadelphia holds the proud place of leader in the horticultural world of America.

The week closing March 29 has been uneventful. There is a fair amount of business, with the tendency of prices going downward, especially on carnations. There are plenty of shipping and local orders requiring good stock, with no special surplus in the better grades. Emperor daffodils are fine and remain firm in price. The southern stock is not plentiful enough to mar their market. The sweet pea vines that have done hard work all winter are tiring now. Their flowers bring one-half the price of some of the vines that are just coming into bloom. Single violets are pretty well out of the race; doubles are good, but not plentiful at times. Beauties continue scarce. Cattleya Mossiae strengthens the sought-after dark orchids. Easter lilies are not plentiful yet. Valley and lilacs are good. There is some colored lilac now. Daisies and pansies are in fair demand. Snapdragon, except the fancy pink, is dull.

The Spring Show.

The Spring Show of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, held in Horticultural hall last week, was largely an exhibition of bulbs and Easter plants in bloom. It was beautiful—experts said a decided improvement over last year. The competition was keen among the private gardeners for the Dreer, Michell and Waterer prizes. The Henry A. Dreer Co. made an excellent exhibit of foliage plants and ferns. Phil.

Easter and spring stock. Hustle is perhaps the word that would best describe the fertilizer that has made the place look as it does. The plants are in tip-top condition all the way through; there is no dead wood on the place and none but the best varieties.

The lilies, 5,000 in number, are divided between giganteum and multiflorum, and range from short to medium and tall, passing through the same range of quantity of flowers. The azaleas, curtained off to keep them well back lest we have warm weather before the sixteenth, are in just the condition that gladdens an azalea grower's heart, glossy green foliage and plenty of buds. This same condition strikes terror to the heart of the newspaper man, because it is so difficult for him to tell the varieties apart unless he is told.

The spiræas, all Gladstone, are in splendid shape, set in different houses at different temperatures to get them just right. The hydrangeas are excellent and well timed; the same is true of Marguerite Queen Alexandra. These five standard Easter plants, totaling something like 10,000 in all, make up the bulk of a well grown stock. The balance of the place is filled with a nice assortment of spring-stock in promising condition.

Plants--1911

EASTER LILIES. We will have a splendid lot of lilies for Easter. A canvass of the market reveals the fact that choice lilies are scarce, plenty of medium and poor stock—in fact, too much of the latter—making it more evident than ever that our stock at 15c is the cheapest to buy; a very few extra long at 17½c. Where customers specify plants with three flowers or less, 17½c.

mand from the east side florists, over 140 funerals resulting from the calamity.

Good select American Beauty roses still hold their own. Most of this stock is stort-stemmed and small-headed. Of other roses Killarney dominates everything. There are a few of the new varieties quite popular, but not enough of them arrive to justify quotations. The best carnations were down again to 2 cents Monday. The shipments just now are excessive, and there were many thousands unsold Saturday.

Violets go to the street men in great lots at $1 per thousand and for even less. The best the big stores will pay is 30 cents per hundred. There will be no advance until Easter week. Orchids are abundant, but the demand is not encouraging and buyers are critical in their selections. Many of the wholesalers now feature the orchid in their windows. The majority expect a good demand for Easter. If anything is scarce it is valley and prices are better. Lilies, too, are firm at 6 cents to 8 cents and will gradually improve. There will be no surplus of good flowers for Easter and 12 cents to 15 cents is the present booking suggestion of the plantsmen. There are plenty of callas and the quality is tiptop now.

Monday, April 10, and it will be a national show meeting with exhibits, reminiscences of Boston by those who attended and special features of interest that should draw a large attendance.

Saturday, April 1, sees the opening of the new market at the Fifty-ninth street bridge. It will be a great event in its significance as to the future. John Birnie and Secretary Siebrecht will readily be excused if their walk Saturday reminds one of Chantecler. This is the opening wedge that means years of profit and encouragement to every progressive plantsman within a radius of twenty miles.

William G. Badgley, of Badgley, Riedel & Meyer, represented Chatham at the state federation of shade tree commissioners at Trenton, N. J., March 24. This firm is receiving daily some fine Brunner stock from V. Zuber & Sons, of Whitestone, L. I.

John Donaldson, of Elmhurst, is still on the sick list, a serious attack of inflammatory rheumatism proving hard to overcome.

Carlos Jensen, representing the seed house of L. Dæhnfeldt, of Odense, Denmark, is in the city on his way to the coast. This is his first visit to this country. He visited the Boston flower show Saturday, March 25, and was loud in his praises. He will visit all the large cities, making a two months' tour. Cabbage and cauliflower seeds are the firm's specialties.

The Forster Mansfield Co. arrested their bookkeeper last week for the theft of several hundred dollars, the youthful financier having juggled with the bank balance like a veteran. The firm has been so busy its manager had little time for details.

Sydney Wertheimer, of Wertheimer Bros., is at the Boston show with an exhibit of the firm's specialties. Emil Schloss, of Schloss Bros., is also there with an elaborate display. Mr. Lion, of Lion & Co., says he has decided to postpone his demonstration until the S. A. F. convention at Baltimore.

Day and night, seven days a week in some centers, where it is necessary, the seedsman's harvest is now reaping. Spring is absolutely here; all the signs are with us. Birds, buds and April showers and the "seventeen year" locust have arrived to cap the climax.

The plant auction houses are all booming and many new faces are seen among the buyers.

There is a spirit of optimism prevailing among the best retail establishments as to the Easter outlook. Enterprise is evident in the advance contracts for flowering plants, some having doubled their last year's orders. The disposition to stage expensive decorations in the show windows has never been so pronounced as now. Daily exhibits of the skill of the artists are seen, especially in the bon ton stores of Broadway, Madison and Fifth avenues, well worth going miles to see. Even the Boston show will have nothing more striking and beautiful.

Myer, at 609 Madison avenue, is fortunate in securing the adjoining store for his Easter business. He has added this space permanently to his store and now has over 3,000 square feet, sixty-two feet frontage on Madison avenue and fifty-five feet on Fifty-eighth street, one of the best locations in the city.

Kessler Bros. and J. J. Coan, of the Growers' Cut Flower Co., expect to occupy their new stores for the Easter trade. Both establishments will compare favorably as to size, convenience and ice-box facilities with any of the wholesale centers of this busy street.

Siebrecht & Siebrecht are fast building up a reputation for superb valley and orchids, and no wonder, when the sources of their supply at Astoria and New Rochelle are considered. Their progress has been rapid and they feel that larger quarters will soon be a necessity.

The balance of the first floor of the Coogan building not occupied by A. Moltz & Co. has been leased by H. Nelson and the whole space thrown into one large room and fitted with tables, etc., similar to the Cut Flower Exchange room on the third floor of the Coogan building. The idea is to let space to growers and so accommodate any who cannot secure room in the Exchange above. Theodore Lang makes this his headquarters.

The fine pansies at P. J. Smith's opened the eyes of the British tourists last week and they acknowledged they had seen nothing to excel them in old England.

Many of the wholesalers are handling blooming plants for Easter.

David Clarke's Sons celebrate their sixty-third anniversary next week, a record unique in American floriculture.

Just a year ago the movement of the wholesalers to the other side of Sixth avenue began. Notwithstanding the "exodus," some of the best of them continue between Broadway and Sixth avenue, and it may be years before any further changes occur. Leases run yet from one to five years and the building of skyscrapers will be the only inducement to make a change desirable. Few can hope, however, for the $10,000 bonus on a lease so neatly landed by Ford Bros., twelve months ago.

PROVIDENCE.

The Market.

There was quite a flurry in last week's business because of several large funerals that made a heavy call for flowers. Many of the growers are holding back their product as much as possible and the supply, while sufficient to meet all ordinary and normal demands, is less than usual. The outlook for Easter is promising and there will be a good supply all along the line, according to the reports received from the greenhouse men.

Various Notes.

It is probable that before the end of this season Providence will take its place among other cities of the country having a flower market. There have been several attempts made to start such a market, but none of them materialized because of lack of support. The present movement, however, seems to have more push behind it. The plan is for a market association to be formed as soon as fifteen growers agree to the proposition. The paper already has a number of signatures.

Livingston, Mont.—The Livingston Greenhouses have been sold to the Yellowstone Floral Co., recently organized in Helena, and possession was taken at once. The Livingston concern will be a branch of the company, which will likewise operate in other Montana cities. Henry van Catz will be the manager. J. C. van Catz, the florist for the company, has had a long experience in the floral trade, both in this country and Europe. The company intends to make the Livingston stock so complete that any and every demand of lovers of flowers can be satisfied by the local greenhouses.

Seven Pages of Retailers' Cards

This department for the cards of Leading Retail Florists—those florists who have the facilities for filling the orders sent them by other florists—has made possible the recent rapid development of this branch of the business, a branch of the trade now established for all time and so helpful that its volume will keep on increasing for many years.

Are you sending and receiving your share of these orders? You can send your share (and make 20 per cent profit without effort) if you let your customers know you can perform this service for them. To receive your share—well, The Review's department for Retailers' cards remains the one way of getting prompt action on the order in hand. If you are the only florist in your city represented here, you get the orders coming into your territory from other florists. If you are not represented and "the other fellow" is—we can leave it to you what becomes of these desirable orders.

To be represented costs only 70 cents per week on a yearly order. This is for one-inch space. Other spaces in proportion.

Why not send your order today—now—before you forget it?

BOSTON.

The Market.

On the whole, business has improved a little as compared with a week ago. Prices have not improved, but there is a better clean-up in most lines. A cold snap, with temperatures down as low as zero in some places, has now given way to warmer weather, and we may expect something of a glut later in the week. Business for Lent, taken all in all, has not been bad. Roses are now of their finest quality, averaging a little lower in price. Beauties are of grand quality; so are Killarney. The stems of the latter are extra fine. Chatenay is now showing up well; so is My Maryland, while Mrs. Aaron Ward continues popular. Carnations are in abundant supply, but cleaning up tolerably well. White varieties of late have been in good demand, but are now getting overabundant. The leader in this color here is White Enchantress. In the light pink class Enchantress, unless picked rather closely, loses its color. Fair Maid is seen of nice quality and Pink Delight continues in favor. Single violets are rapidly nearing the end and after the present week will not cut much of a figure.

Sweet peas have been improving in quality each week and are now fine. A large number of varieties are now procurable. Dutch bulbous flowers are in heavy supply, with little change in prices. The long trumpet varieties continue to sell better than the short trumpets. As yet gladioli have not made their appearance, but some good Spanish iris is arriving. This is quickly sold. English primroses are becoming plentiful and sell well. Callas have sold abundantly, but lilies and lily of the valley are each in oversupply. Antirrhinum, especially the pink varieties, is in good demand. Marguerites are more abundant; the yellow varieties sell particularly well. Gardenias are plentiful and cheaper. Cattleyas are rather scarce. Schrödera is the variety now mostly seen. There are plenty of den-drobiums.

Asparagus and adiantum are each selling fairly well. Pot plant trade is becoming lively. Rambler roses, such as Tausendschon, Dorothy Perkins and Hiawatha, are in especial favor, also hydrangeas, genistas, acacias and bulbous subjects. The clear weather lately en-

Various Notes.

William Patterson, of Wollaston, achieved a signal success at the flower show in the classes for bulbous plants, capturing no less than twenty-four premiums on hyacinths, tulips and narcissi. Mr. Patterson is one of our best bulb men and his many friends are proud of his success.

The next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club will come April 25, the hall being rented on the regular meeting night, April 18. B. Hammond Tracy, the well known gladiolus specialist, will lecture on the gladiolus and its culture.

Perry Green, of Quincy, is bringing in an extra fine lot of dimorphotheca and sweet peas to the Boston Cooperative Market.

Mann Bros., of Randolph, have the market practically to themselves so far on Spanish iris, bringing in thirty dozen daily. They sell an immense quantity of Dutch bulbous flowers daily.

The Sutermeister Estate, of Readville, is now doing a heavy business in pans and pots of bulbs. Their Empress and Victoria narcissi are extra fine. They also have a fine lot of tritonias.

We were pleased to see the veteran Joseph Tailby, of Wellesley, at the flower show March 26, the first time Mr. Tailby has visited Boston in three years. He was accompanied by his grandchildren and took all his old-time delight in the exhibits.

Thomas Pegler is handling finely grown Spiraea Gladstone, grandiflora and astilboides from W. A. Riggs, of Newtonville, and Newtonville Conservatories.

Peter Hylen, of Randolph, has yellow marguerites with superb stems and carrying flowers five inches across, which sell on sight.

Sidney Hoffman had the lion's share of the designs for the funeral of the late Nathaniel Thayer, and turned out a large number of beautiful pieces. Mr. Hoffman manifested his hustling capabilities when he removed about 100 large designs from St. Paul Episcopal church, on Tremont street, to the South station per autos, and had all in position in the baggage car of a special train there within seventeen minutes.

Albert Batley, of Maynard, has at present a splendid lot of Winsor, Pink Delight, Beacon and Enchantress carnations.

Pink carnations have been chosen by Queen Mary as the coronation flower and Winsor is the Queen's special favorite. This pleases Peter Murray, of Fairhaven, Mass., the raiser of this popular variety on two continents. It is also satisfactory to learn that Enchantress, raised by another Massachusetts man, is next in order of popularity for the same occasion.

One of the most admired plants at the flower show was the new azalea, Lady Roosevelt, from the W. W. Edgar Co. Were this procurable in quantity, it would be in tremendous demand, as there is no other azalea of this unique color. It is a sport from Rudolf Seidel. All the seed stores are now taxed to their full resources to keep abreast of orders. The cold weather has somewhat delayed counter trade, but it is now on with a rush which is almost overwhelming.

No gladioli were to be seen at the flower show, not even The Bride or any of the nanus type. Many local growers tried to get large batches in flower, but none succeeded.

Daniel Scott is now grower for A. M. Davenport, of Watertown. Mr. Davenport has a grand lot of lilies, hydrangeas and other plants for Easter. He is also a specialist on strawberries in pots.

No man worked harder for the success of the flower show than Thomas Roland. He exhibited an enormous quantity of plants and the awards received were in all cases well merited. It is doubtful whether any trade exhibitor ever before staged a more superb group of hard-wooded plants than Mr. Roland, the difficult culture of which all growers can appreciate.

E. H. Borowski's new King construction house, started February 25, is completed and being filled with plants. It is a light house and pleases Mr. Borowski much.

The closing lecture in the winter course of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society was given March 25 by J. H. Hale, of South Glastonbury, Conn., on "The Horticultural Awakening in New England." A large audience enjoyed the lecture.

William T. Walke, of Salem, is making a big hit with his new pink antirrhinum, which sells on sight. He also has a splendid lot of Easter plants coming along. W. N. Craig.

DAYTON, O.

The Market.

Trade for the last two weeks might best be expressed by saying that "it has come steady by jerks." This is to say that some days have been most encouraging, while others have been just the opposite. Taken all in all, one can scarcely complain, for during the lenten season trade is always more or less slow. Funeral work appears to be the only thing to keep stock on the move, and even in this line the demand has not been specially great.

Stock of all kinds has been most plentiful, with the exception of carnations, which are off crop. This brings much delight to the grower, as he sees Easter ahead, and appreciates the fact that large cuts of carnations are needed at that time, and judging from the present outlook a heavy crop will be coming along in good time. The rose cuts are heavy, as the bright days of the last several weeks have brought them in abundance. However, the call from the surrounding towns, where but few roses are grown, is sufficient, so that the supply does not come amiss.

Lilies are still in heavy supply, but the market is better on them than it has been of late. The warm weather has brought bulbous stock along rapidly and it is crowding the market, although it moves fairly well—better than could be expected, as the market gardeners are disposing of much of it to the street fakers and this, of course, makes it harder for the florist to sell his supply.

Green goods are a little scarce.

Various Notes.

The Miami Floral Co. reports trade quite satisfactory and says that the prospects for Easter are most encouraging. This company is booking some large orders for Easter lilies and also expects to cut a large crop of carnations for the Easter trade.

Mrs. Bertha Hendrichs, who for the last twenty years has conducted a retail store at 808 East Fifth street, has retired from business, her daughter, Mrs. L. D. Johnson, being her successor. Mrs. Hendrichs is not enjoying the best of health at the present time.

Herbert Bartholomew spent March 19 at Miamisburg, O. Mr. Bartholomew seems to be spending considerable of his time in the "burg"; there appears to be some strong attraction.

Ruby A. Bartholomew spent March 26 and 27 in Richmond, Ind., where she was called to attend the funeral of a friend.

Harry C. Kiefaber, president of the Miami Floral Co., has recently undergone a delicate but successful operation in his throat. He is getting along as well as could be expected.

A trio of Cincinnati tradesmen, consisting of Charles E. Critchell, Fred Gear and Julius Baer, selected the worst day in March and came to Dayton to get better acquainted with our florists,

ISBELL'S NEW GRAND FORCING CUCUMBER

A Great Outdoor Forcer

In this remarkable new Cucumber we have attained the ideal sort for Gardeners, Truckers and Shippers. It is absolutely perfect in shape, and surprisingly uniform. The photographic illustration on this page shows the type, and they all look alike.

In size they run between Arlington and Davis Perfect, making them ideal in this respect and suited to all markets. When about 6 to 7 inches long, there is not a particle of waste when used as a slicer and the seeds at that stage are hardly noticeable.

The deep green color, however, is the crowning merit of this sort. It fully equals (some say excels) the Davis Perfect in this respect, and the latter up to this date, has been the darkest green variety obtainable. The Davis Perfect, however, has proven a little too large for some markets, and occasionally has a hard neck, from which the New Grand Forcing is absolutely free. Every particle is edible.

Isbell's New Grand Forcing has another grand quality and this is its wonderful prolificacy. It seems to aim to produce a cucumber at every joint.

This new variety is bound to create a sensation and every grower who wants to be abreast of the times must plant it.

A prominent Eastern seedsman when shown our crop, wanted to buy 25 lbs. of it at once, and when we told him we did not wish to sell any to other seedsmen, he dared us to set a price. This shows what an expert thinks of this wonderful variety.

The supply of seed is not large and we request customers to order early.

STEM-ROT OF LETTUCE.

We are sending you under separate cover some samples of lettuce and wish you would examine it and inform us as to the trouble. We never had any of this trouble until this winter. The disease attacks the small plants when first double-rooted and continues until they are ready to cut. Our soil is a loam and we do not think it is too heavily manured. The trouble exists in the dry and moist beds alike. It is getting to be a serious affair. If you can let us know what the trouble is and the remedy, the favor will be greatly appreciated.

C. & B.

The diseased sample plants arrived in good condition for examination. Your crops are attacked by the stem-rot of lettuce, which gives so much trouble to a great many growers. I would suggest that you remove all the diseased plants; they will only die when a little older, anyhow. Take a shingle and scrape the top soil off where they were and carry it out of the house. Scatter plenty of air-slaked lime around on the soil at the diseased spots and in a circle around them. Sulphur and lime mixed is even better than lime alone, but the lime should be fine. Mix them half and half and dust the mixture on quite freely.

This disease, like all fungous diseases, is really a plant growth, which roots into the soil and stems of plants also. The spores or seeds of the fungus are borne on hair-like growths, like grain heads in a field borne on long straws. Whenever these spores mature and are carried to other spots where conditions are favorable, they germinate and start another spot of the disease. If they happen to alight in unfavorable places they fail to germinate or make any headway, just as garden crops would do if conditions were not favorable for them to grow in. Lime and sulphur are both exterminators of fungous growths, but still are not strong enough to injure the crops. They therefore kill off the fungus, preventing it from going to seed and spreading over the houses, as weed seed spreads over a garden.

The soil in a greenhouse, when once thoroughly impregnated with the spores of disease, will continue to make trouble until changed for clean, fresh, new soil, or until the old soil is sterilized. Manure in soil for lettuce really should be put in long before the soil is used, as it is usually the cause of the trouble. If thoroughly rotted together, the soil is also more valuable and there is less chance for the fungus to have it to live on. This fungus spreads over the surface of the soil, living on decaying material, etc.

I believe it unnecessary to mention the importance of fresh air and ventilation, but suggest that you keep the water down on the soil, not wetting the foliage, but running the hose in between the plants, with the water turned on slowly. Cultivate young plants a little and do not keep them too wet.

Florists' Supplies at Manufacturers' Prices

We manufacture many lines of florists' supplies, either in our own big building or elsewhere, and all others we handle in such large quantity that we can make our modest profit selling at the prices manufacturers charge smaller buyers. In no case do we permit ourselves to be undersold. The greater part of our business being mail orders for a general line of supplies, we are in a position to defy price competition on the same grade of goods. Outside of price, buyers will appreciate their many advantages in placing their orders all in one place—saving in time, bother and express. We carry everything and so large a stock we can at all times fill all orders promptly.

We sell Ribbons and Chiffons at first hands, direct from the loom Buying our Ribbons in loom orders direct from the mills means that we must carry an immense stock, but it also means that we get special florists' qualities (not department store stock) at a cost that makes it possible for us to sell at the same prices smaller jobbers pay. We have every flower shade in every width and several grades of silk, satin taffeta, mousselines, moire, plain taffeta and satin gros grain. A complete range of price and qualities; there's nothing in Ribbons we can't supply. Full 10-yard bolts. A good many florists "sit up and take notice" when they begin to compare our Ribbons, Chiffons, Nettings and Ties, and our Prices, with the goods they have been getting and the prices they have been paying.

Send us a trial order—for a few bolts of the ribbon you use most, or for the kinds you are short of.

We want it specially understood that all Ribbons and Chiffons ordered of us by mail are sent out with our guarantee of satisfaction. If the Ribbons or Chiffons are not thoroughly satisfactory in quality, color, price and in every other particular, the shipment is to be returned at once and we will pay transportation cost both ways. If any part of the shipment is not as wanted, that part is to be returned. It is absolutely safe to order of Randall—we take all the risk.

BUYING BASKETS BY MAIL

We have a very large stock of staple and novelty Baskets—and buying Baskets by mail is the simplest and most satisfactory matter imaginable. You have only to write us what you want to use the baskets for, what size, shape, style, material, price—anything to let us know your needs—and we send you a collection, as many pieces as you say, or to cost a certain sum of money. Collections at $5.00, $10.00, $15.00, $20.00, $25.00, $50.00. You unpack the baskets and look them over, examine them in your own store, judge of quality, style, price. If not in every way satisfactory, pack them up at once and ship them back to us. Or you can send back any part. We take all the risk.

THE FLORISTS' REVIEW, CHICAGO, ILL.

GENTLEMEN:—In looking over our advertising records for the last few years, we find that your publication has made a remarkable record. Since we began to advertise with you in 1907, for every dollar we have spent we have received $8.74 in direct sales. This leaves out, of course, all the indirect influences which our advertising has had, which, no doubt, amounts to a great deal.

We think it only due you to let you know these facts and we will be glad at any time to testify to the value of your publication as a medium for reaching high grade florists.

Thanking you for your many favors, we are

Yours very truly,

MCCRAY REFRIGERATOR CO., T. T. REDINGTON, Advertising Manager.

Seed Trade News.AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., E. L. Page, Greene, N. Y.; First Vice-pres., L. H. Vaughan, Chicago; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. Twenty-ninth annual meeting, June 20 to 22, 1911.

A LARGER business has been done in sweet peas this year than in any previous seed season.

DOBBIE & SON, Edinburgh, Scotland, have sent out a new sweet pea called Sun-proof Crimson that is said to be true to its name.

SEED buyers are learning that germination is far from being the most important factor in determining value in seeds. Quality of product is what counts.

It is more than possible that, if seeds were sold as "U. S. Standard," the term would become one no seedsman would care to use on his selected strains.

THE free distribution of seeds by the government this year included seven tons of sweet peas and just a trifle more than that weight of nasturtium.

SINCE leasing its greenhouses to H. E. Mitting, the Mangelsdorf Bros. Co., Atchison, Kan., is confining itself almost exclusively to the jobbing seed business.

THE J. W. Jung Seed Co., Randolph, Wis., recently booked a contract order for 100 pounds of Kochia Tricophylla, which Mr. Jung thinks is the largest single order ever placed for seeds of the standing cypress.

THE government seed shop was delayed in the early stages of its work this season by failure of its congressional patrons to supply addresses in time, but the mailing has now been brought up to date and it is expected to finish the 1911 distribution about April 20.

A LONDON newspaper has offered $5,000 in prizes for a sweet pea competition open to amateur growers and some of the leading English seed houses say it has greatly stimulated the demand for seeds. E. W. King & Co., Coggeshall, are quoted in one trade journal as saying it will clear up a ton or more of sweet peas that would otherwise have been carried over.

BETWEEN Lisse and Hillegom, in Holland, there is yet a large area inside the dunes. When cultivated this soil is able to grow hyacinths. Although not by any means yet in condition, this land is already being sold in lots to several bulb growers at a price said to be about $1,500 per acre. Many will be astonished to hear of what is considered comparatively poor soil commanding such an extraordinary price for this use.

IMPROVEMENT OF ASTERS.

[A paper by George Arnold, read at the annual Farmers' Day Meeting, at Cornell University,
Ithaca, N. Y., February 23, 1911.]

A short time ago I undertook a careful review of the work we have been doing in asters for the last five years. My purpose was to select certain definite points for presenting to your attention today. After looking over the ground, it seemed to me that I had made a mis-with other workers as it now seems to me we should have done, and we are only beginning to grasp some of the fundamental truths of varieties that have been well known for a long time to many of those now present. Although we have dug out no new principles in plant breeding and have originated nothing that is really startling, we have made a steady advance in the character of our stock. It is for this reason that I purpose speaking today of the methods of our work as well as of the results accomplished.

The Search for Double Forms.

An aster is nothing if not double—I refer, of course, to the regular commercial varieties. Continuous search has been made, therefore, for plants having more double flowers. We have found decided differences in varieties in respect to the amount of improvement to which they were susceptible. The more “stubborn” sorts, as we have called them, have but little variability. Occasional plants would be found in these varieties producing fine double flowers. The seed from these plants would be grown separately. But the following year they would be marked “No improvement” and would be thrown back into the general stock. Apparently the doubling had come from some temporary condition especially favorable to the plant. Still, by using stock seed selected mainly for the double character of the flowers, we can see that we have made a distinct advance in five years in even the most stubborn varieties.

Eliminating a Yellow Center.

In the variety known as the Cardinal the undesirable yellow center has been eliminated in an unusual way. As the variety came to us in 1907, every flower showed a yellow center at an early stage. The variety was well established and the make-up of the flower was such that I considered it a most stubborn case. When we grew our first crop in 1908 it was noticed that, as the flowers aged, the yellow disk florets changed to the color of the outer florets, or “petals,” and also became somewhat elongated. One plant was found in which the center of the opening flower was filled with long tubular florets of the same color as the outer parts, and long enough to avoid the appearance of stiffness common to most asters with quilled centers. This character has held for two seasons without any tendency to reversion, and we were able to grow our crop of this variety in 1910 from the produce of the single plant found in 1908.

The Branching Asters.

When the branching asters were introduced they became popular at once, by reason of their large flowers and long stems. For commercial use the great number of lateral branches has been something of a drawback, many of the growers going to the expense of having all the main branches disbudded. When I entered upon my present work in 1906, I found some selections of white branching that had been made for earliness. The plants were of a semi-upright habit, much less spreading than the type. There were but few branches and these were practically devoid of laterals. It struck me that this feature was more valuable than earliness, and since then we have worked steadily to reduce the number of laterals on all branching varieties. It is interesting to note that when we have succeeded in getting non-lateral selections of other varieties they have also been semi-upright and early. Breeding off so many flowers has proportionately reduced the production of seed and has thus brought up a serious commercial problem.

Obtaining the Upright Form.

In general, for commercial purposes, an upright plant is more desirable than one of a spreading habit. We now have a large number of upright selections taken from the spreading types. Several of these are fixed and promise to become good commercial varieties. There are also a smaller number of early flowering forms taken from late varieties. In the great majority of cases, when we have found a plant in one of the late varieties that was early or non-lateral, or upright to semi-upright in growth, it has appeared to be a hybrid with one of the upright, mid-season types—Giant Comet, Victoria or Truffaut.

To keep our trial plantings within limits, we have saved each year only a few plants of distinctly hybrid origin—plants that were desirable both in flower and in habit of plant. We have disregarded the latent possibilities of the many combinations that appeared in the second generation. For the same purpose of keeping down our trial list, we have frequently thrown together the seed from a number of plants in a trial of hybrid origin, when they have appeared to be similar. Sometimes this has worked out all right; more frequently, I should say, it has not. If the originating of new varieties were a more important part of our business, we should probably adhere quite rigidly to the method of breeding from single plants until the strain was well fixed.

Turning now from a consideration of the general scope of the work, we will take up some of the minor details—the mechanical part of the work.

Planting in the Trial Grounds.

Growing, as we did last summer, thirty-seven acres of asters, in more than fifty varieties, on one farm, we did not consider it expedient to separate all the varieties. We have, however, a general scheme for planting, to which we adhere as closely as circumstances permit. Similar colors and types are associated in the field. Beginning on one side of the field, the colors range in somewhat regular gradations from light to dark. We are not sure that this tends to lessen the amount of hybridizing by insects. We are inclined to think that it does. We are sure that it minimizes the damage done by such hybridizing.

To grow the plants necessary for a Meeting Nature Half-Way

By Elbert Hubbard

☐ Waving grain is only Nature's way of beckoning us to work. Man must evolve what Nature suggests. She meets us only one-fourth of the way. We know that this is so, because by digging, building and changing the earth we get more than we ever dreamed of.

☐ Out of our necessities we have become expert. And when a man gains masterly proficiency in any one line, he attracts the world's attention.

☐ In seeds it is W. Atlee Burpee. When Nature whispers a suggestion this man catches his cue. He has compelled Nature to meet the farmer at least half-way by his experiments. The man who helps the farmer,—helps humanity.

☐ The very existence of the race turns on the ability of the farmer to produce food. Burpee provides this important factor in our economic system by raising seeds that are sure and safe. Burpee says that he knows the only one use for seeds, and so he sells only Seeds That Grow.

☐ The Burpee Annual is a textbook for every farmer, and the good agriculturist is always a student and an economist.

☐ The soil is bounteous and full of precious gifts, but we need Burpee to tell us how, when and where.

☐ Burpee breeds seeds that are the parents of better seeds, and the process goes on until we have a new vegetable or flower. He is not engaged in creating freaks. His purposes are practical. Burpee is a business man as well as an artist, a botanist and a farmer. Thirty-four years of his enthusiasm, intelligence and devotion have brought about the highest quality seeds on the market.

☐ If farming is not your business, convert that patch back of the house into a beautiful and useful little garden. It will mean health and joy for you. Though you may be a novice as a gardener, just follow Burpee's suggestions and plant his seeds. You'll make good, too.

☐ Anyway, send for the Burpee Nineteen Hundred Eleven Garden Annual, which will be mailed for the asking.

☐ Do it now while you are thinking about it.

It is sufficient to address

"Seeds That Grow"

Philadelphia, - - - Pa.

The most complete catalog published for MARKET GARDENERS, TRUCKERS and FLORISTS. For the planter who "knows" it contains complete lists of all that is best in vegetables and flowers, while the grower who is uncertain as to the best varieties suited for his purpose may be guided by the bull's-eye ☉ placed after what is known to be best. In addition full descriptions are given of many new and most valuable varieties.

BURPEE'S BLUE LIST FOR 1911 contains 146 pages with hundreds of half-tone and engraved illustrations. Within the pages of this catalog we have condensed an experience of thirty-four years both in handling and the actual growing of seeds.

If you garden for profit (that is, sell your products in the market) you are entitled to a copy of this complete and easily understood catalog, but if you are a private planter please do not ask for a copy, as we must protect the Market Gardener, Trucker and Florist.

block of any one variety of asters for seed purposes requires the produce of from fifty to 200 plants. Under our present system, this is obtained by staking individual plants. In case the seed from selected plants should prove insufficient, and to provide against accident, we have a reserve stock. A part of one row is set aside for stock seed and is rogued much more severely than the rest of the block.

The System of Marking.

In sowing seed, and in planting in the field, we observe the rule common in all nursery operations, of working from left to right. As the best seed is sowed first in the plant bed, the best bred plants come at the left side of each block in the field. It is in these rows that we stake selections for next year.

Formerly these stock plants were indicated by wooden stakes. But the handling of several thousand stakes, used in this and other similar operations, became so burdensome that we made up stakes from No. 9 plain wire. They are made long enough to show above the plants when the seed is being harvested. To render them more conspicuous, a double ring is made in the top, from which a shipping tag is suspended by a tag fastener.

Using much inexperienced help in the harvesting of the many varieties, we have found it helpful to indicate the varieties by numbers. Multiples of ten are used for leading varieties and for distinct types. The intervening numbers are used for minor or temporary varieties. In this way similar kinds are indicated by closely associated numbers.

varieties that were grown separately on account of special excellence. Two factors contribute to the decrease: First, we already have a great many of the desirable combinations of type and color in established selections that are being carried along for further observation; second, the main stocks are becoming increasingly uniform in character.

Numbering the Selections.

We have tried several schemes for keeping track of these selections. Our present system is to use a number of four digits for each selection. The first digit indicates the year in which the number was assigned; the other digits make up the serial number for that year.

To mark the numbered plants of the current season, we use the same device that is used for staking single plants for stock seed, except that in this case the number is punched in the tag. The tag is also fastened to the stake more securely.

When it comes to planting the trial selections, four or more rows are marked crosswise of the field. A lot of plants may fill four or five of these sections; or it may fill a third of one section; the next lot will begin at the following cross mark. By this means we can have the stakes all in line and easily found, notwithstanding the fact that the plantings are of uneven size.

IMPROVEMENT IN SEED GROWING.

Seed crops are frequently grown by farmers who have little knowledge, ability, or liking for the work, and often only because the seed needed for planting a certain area is advanced to them, or because for some other reason it is more convenient for them to plant a seed crop than any of those commonly grown on the farm, says W. W. Tracy, formerly for years with D. M. Ferry & Co., in one of the bulletins he has written for the Department of Agriculture. It is evident that under such circumstances actual seed growing would not drift into the hands of the best farmers, nor seed crops be sufficiently popular to secure the best care from those who do plant them. Few farmers who grow seed crops continue to do so for as many as a dozen consecutive years, and seedsmen are obliged to change frequently the centers from which they place their contracts in order to secure growers willing to undertake them. It is evident that present conditions are by no means such as portance of sample and stock. (Seedsmen commonly use the word sample as referring to the viability, color, and appearance of a lot of seed, and the term stock as referring to the quality, purity, and evenness of type resulting from the line of breeding and ancestry.) In many cases purchasers will choose the better looking of two samples of seed at a higher price, although they know nothing of the stock from which it was grown except that it is said to be of the variety named, rather than the poorer looking sample, which, though quite possibly of lower viability, is known to have been grown from well-bred stock seed. Seedsmen should emphasize far more than they do, through their salesmen, catalogues, and price lists, the superior value of seed produced from stocks which are known to have been carefully bred to a certain distinct varietal character. They should refuse to handle seeds which they do not know were grown from pure and true stocks. Planters should not be tempted by low prices to purchase seed of unknown or uncertain quality, but should always buy that which they believe to be the purest and truest stock, paying comparatively little attention to appearance, or even to viability.

(2) The seedsman should change his attitude toward the contracting farmer, looking upon him as a seed grower rather than as a mere cultivator and making every effort to increase his interest in and knowledge of the varietal character of the sort of seed he grows, as well as the special cultural methods which will best develop its distinguishing merits. This would necessitate the seedsman's making a greater effort to place his growing contracts not only with cultivators who are favorably situated as to climate and soil for growing certain seeds, but with those who are likely to continue to grow seeds and by a better knowledge of their cultural requirements secure greater uniformity and stability. In order to induce such men to plant seed crops it might be necessary to pay better prices for growing, but this would be more than balanced, even financially, by the elimination of careless and incompetent growers, who are apt to fail to deliver the expected crop and through whose negligence carefully selected stocks are often lost. The advantage accruing from a clientage of experienced and careful growers interested in the varietal characteristics of the stocks they grow and who by greater care and better cultural methods would grow not only better seed but in more uniform quantities, thus lessening the liability to alternating periods of scarcity and surplus, would more than offset the higher price paid the farmer.

(3) There is a possibility of great improvement on the part of the farmer grower through more careful study not only of the particular crop but of the variety best adapted to his own conditions of soil and climate and of the cultural method which will give him the greatest certainty of a crop that shall be bright, clean, highly viable, and best suited for seedsmen's use. Many cases are known where two crops from the same stock seed were grown on adjacent farms by men who were considered equally good cultivators, and one crop was clean, viable, and thoroughly satisfactory for use as seed, while the other, solely because of difference in handling, was so discolored and lacking in viability that it was worthless for seedsmen's use.

Farmers seldom appreciate the importance to the seedsman of receiving the full quantity of seed contracted for. This in some cases is so great as to justify seedsmen when dealing with a professional seed grower in making an advance of from ten to fifty per cent in price for a guaranteed delivery of the full amount of the contract. We may question the wisdom of making a guarantee of this kind, but the fact that such prices are paid shows how important and valuable the seedsman regards the careful handling of the crop so as to secure the expected return of usable seed.

plants of the exact varietal character desired, but which had behind it the greatest possible number of generations of just such plants.

The seedsman and farmer should come to a very clear understanding as to the exact form wanted in each variety. This should be established by samples, photographs, and full varietal descriptions, and it should be rigidly adhered to in selecting stock seed. An interested and intelligent farmer grower who confines his seed crop to a single variety of a species is in a better position to select stock seed, and is able to do it better and cheaper than a seedsman, and he should be fully advised as to the exact varietal character wanted and instructed to grow a sufficiency of the best possible stock for his own crops, if nothing more.

The cultural methods which will give the best returns with grain crops are generally equally well adapted to the growing of a crop for seed, but with the latter it is important that special care be taken that the seed be pure and that the percentage of viability is high. The best methods for securing crops of such seed will vary with different species and may be considered separately.

DODDER IN CHILEAN CLOVER.

The United States Department of Agriculture says that since July 1, 1910, twenty-three lots of clover seed of probable Chilean origin, aggregating 370,000 pounds, have been imported into the United States. In all of these shipments two kinds of dodder seed characteristic of Chilean red-clover seed were present. At a normal rate of seeding, these shipments are sufficient to seed approximately 46,000 acres, and at this rate of seeding an average of approximately 450 dodder seeds would be sown on each square rod. The sowing of this Chilean seed this spring means that the clover crop on a considerable proportion of the area on which it is seeded will be destroyed by dodder, and farmers should be on their guard against purchasing this seed. Unfortunately, most of these importations have gone into the southern part of the clover-producing region, where this dodder will undoubtedly prove disastrous. This Chilean clover seed is itself especially fine looking seed, being dark colored and approximately fifty per cent larger in size than ordinary red-clover seed produced in the United States. It will, therefore, doubtless receive a ready sale on account of its fine appearance.

A wave of cheapness is now sweeping over the lily bulb business. A multitude of firms are soliciting orders, who, in their misconception of the first principles of a successful lily bulb business, are fighting one another to see who can get to the bottom of the price list. You will not find us traveling that way—we are fighting for a better quality continually, and the cost is a secondary consideration. The main thing is that the quality shall be worthy of the cost, and it's the everlasting driving for better bulbs that keeps us busy.

A grower can well afford to pay a fair price for lily bulbs of sure good quality, and he can be more sure of Horseshoe Brand Giganteum than any other brand produced.

CUT FLOWERS

We are growing Daffodils, Paper White Narcissus, etc., of the finest quality, in such large quantity that we can maintain a constant supply on all Pacific Coast markets. If you wish regular shipments or rush orders filled at reasonable prices, telegraph or write The Leedham Bulb Co., Santa Cruz, Cal. Gladiolus America, Tulips, Spanish Iris, etc., in season.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The weather continues pleasant and, although rain has threatened for several days, the sunshine is still with us. The carnations and roses are making up for lost time and the town is literally swamped with them. The prices have gone glimmering in consequence and it is useless to give any quotations. In a couple of weeks, however, things will commence to right themselves again. The reason for the sudden avalanche of blossoms is not hard to find. Usually at this time we are treated to something similar, but this season, owing to the several weeks' rest of inside stock of all kinds, with the first few days of sunshine the pent-up vigor of the plants suddenly burst forth and we all can see the result.

Daffodils of the later sorts are commencing to be a factor in the market and violets are slightly on the wane. Easter lilies are daily becoming more plentiful and, from all appearances, will be in sufficient quantity to fill all requirements. Valley is in good supply and moves well. Wild flowers of half a dozen sorts fill in nicely and help the show along. Fruit blossoms and wild ferns, together with several varieties of native growths, are all being used. Business is only fair, with quite a lessening of funeral orders, and the usual lenten dullness hovers over everything.

Various Notes.

S. Benning & Co. have opened at 3250 Mission street.

H. M. Taylor has been appointed trustee of the United Eucalyptus Nurseries of Sacramento and Oakland, Cal., which assigned recently for the benefit of their creditors. G.

VICTORIA, B. C.

The Market.

Trade during the last few weeks has been quite satisfactory. There does not seem to have been a surplus in any of the standard lines, although there has been at least an average supply of everything except roses.

Lilies, from present appearances, will be poor and scarce. The bulbs when first received were seen to be below the usual size, and further tests have shown more than the usual percentage of disease; one firm threw out over sixty per cent before the final potting.

Outdoor daffodils are now arriving in quantity. Golden Spur in sheltered locations is of fair quality. A comparatively large area is now planted to bulbs in this locality and, unless the demand grows quickly, it is hard to see where they can be disposed of at remunerative rates.

Club Notes.

Highly satisfactory progress has been made with the Florists' and Gardeners' Club. Between thirty and forty members are now enrolled and there are applications at each meeting. The first of a series of public meetings to be held under the auspices of the society was held in the Broad street hall, March 28, when Roy Winslow, provincial hor-

The Market.

Business has been quieter since the lenten season commenced. The small amount of entertaining and the sunny, spring-like weather have deluged the market. Carnations of all varieties are consigned to the dump in quantities. Daffodils are a drug, impossible to move at any price, as too much outside stock is available.

Violets are becoming scarce and will be practically out of the market for Easter, but all other stock for that occasion is coming along nicely, with a guarantee of great plenty.

Greens are unusually scarce, with no supply to draw from.

The nurserymen are jubilant, as business to date far exceeds previous years, and the season has only just begun.

Various Notes.

James Forbes left last week to attend the National Flower Show in Boston, and expected to stop over at the principal cities en route.

R. O. Hinz, of Leavenworth, Kan., is visiting here and contemplates making this city his future home.

LOS ANGELES OPPORTUNITIES.

Having had several inquiries in regard to the opportunities for a grower with capital out here, in Los Angeles, Cal., I thought that possibly a few remarks on the subject might not be amiss.

Five years ago there were two or three small greenhouses, containing not over 30,000 feet of glass all told, devoted to the growing of cut flowers for this market. In these houses carnations only were grown, all the hot-house roses being shipped in from the north and arriving in the usual condition after traveling 500 miles or more. About fifty acres were devoted to carnations in the open field, and possibly twenty acres to violets and five to roses.

At the present time there are three good sized places for the growing of carnations under glass; these produce about 5,000 blooms a day and will produce during the spring months 10,000 daily. There are two firms that grow roses for the wholesale trade; one of them has three houses, each 55x300, and the other has smaller houses, with about half that area. One retail dealer has four houses, each 28x300, devoted to rose culture, growing 80,000 American Beauties, 12,000 Killarneys, etc., all of this output going to his own store in the city. The same grower has three smaller houses devoted to mixed stock, carnations, lilies, etc., for his own use.

In open field culture, there are at least 150 acres devoted to carnations, 100 to violets and thirty to roses. There are two small establishments that grow adiantums, but not one-quarter enough to supply the local demand, which exceeds 10,000 per day, the balance being shipped in daily from San Francisco, 500 miles away.

The growing of flowering plants for retail florists is only touched on the edges. A few hundred begonias, about 1,000 azaleas, probably 5,000 cyclamens and a few pots of bulbous stock are produced.

In the growing of bulbous flowers there are two growers of Purity free-sias, and about an acre in each place is covered with lath in tulips, hyacinths, narcissi, etc. There are three firms that grow these for the wholesale trade. It is my opinion that the market will be well supplied with this class of blooms. After a careful survey of the field, I should judge there will be about 125,000 tulips, 250,000 Paper Whites, 500,000 Emperor, 100,000 large flowering Dutch hyacinths, 100,000 gladioli, 50,000 Belladonna amaryllis, etc.

After spending several years in the retail trade in this city and recently going into the wholesale trade, I am convinced of the need—yes, the urgent demand—for a number of large growing establishments, as the outside shipping trade in Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, etc., would use at paying prices the greater portion of all stock produced, whereas there is not enough at present for local use, even with the limited number of stores we have in this growing city.

What is needed is more modern houses and men of enterprise and experience. The field is a large one, the demand a growing one and the opportunities unbounded. The wealth of the moneyed world is being poured into Los Angeles, and where wealth is, there is a demand for choice flowers. Yet, with all these favorable conditions before us, we are obliged to put up with thousands of inferior field-grown blossoms, which too often can be had in quantity when not wanted and are exceedingly scarce when the demand is urgent.

On account of the inferiority and unreliability of crop, the field-grown carnations would soon cease to figure in our markets, except as a summer bridge-over, if the demand could be met with enough house-grown blooms.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Officers for 1910-11: Pres., W. P. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; Vice-pres. E. S. Welch, Shenandoah, Ia.; Sec'y, John Hall Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-sixth annual meeting, St. Louis, June, 1911.

THE question of labor is one of the unsolved problems of nursery management.

COL. G. B. BRACKETT, the pomologist of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, is an octogenarian.

PRYAL'S NURSERY was established in San Francisco in 1852, removed to Oakland in 1862 and has been at its present site there since 1864.

WITH the development of the demand for stock in the south and the north-west and with the increase in fall planting in colder sections, the nursery business has become a pretty steady grind.

PLANTINGS of the Stark Delicious apple in territory that is adaptable are being stimulated by the prices obtained for last season's crop of this variety. Nothing else brought such good money.

J. GEORGE BOWYER, formerly of Gonzalez, is starting the San Benito Semitropical Nursery at San Benito, Tex.

THE Illinois Horticultural Society, W. B. Lloyd, Kinmundy, secretary, has announced an orchard spraying contest for its members.

THE American Pomological Society may hold its next biennial meeting (1913) at Chicago, with a view to securing a larger attendance.

THE railroads appear to be of the opinion that nursery stock is one of the commodities on which rates are not all the traffic will bear.

IN the month of January, 1911, imports of trees, shrubs and plants were valued at $147,599, as against $164,010 in the same month of 1910.

THE extreme of state legislation is to make the nurseryman file a bond with a state official to indemnify any purchaser of nursery stock that may later prove not true to name. Such a law would result in giving over a state to the nurserymen outside its jurisdiction.

duction of one of the best German iris hybridizers in Europe.

If the multiplication of legislation continues a legal office will soon be as necessary as a traffic office in every large nursery.

It is reported that on the evening of March 15 the stock on the grounds of the Gilbertson Nursery Co., at Mason City, Ia., was seriously damaged by fire, supposed to have been started by sparks from a locomotive. The loss, it is said, amounted to $10,000, and it was only by the energetic efforts of about 200 men that the flames were prevented from spreading to the neighboring woods.

MONTANA NURSERY LAWS.

The Florists' and Nurserymen's Association of Montana, with headquarters at Helena, has recently obtained some important amendments of the horticultural laws of that state.

A clause debarring nurserymen from being represented on the state board of horticulture has been cut out. Greenhouse plants have been exempted from inspection and provision has been made for an appeal to the state board of horticulture against an inspector's decision, when necessary. All fees collected by inspectors are now to be turned over into the state treasury; previously the inspectors were allowed to keep $150 each month as wages.

Previously the law provided that nursery stock grown in Montana should be inspected after it was dug from the rows or grounds. The nurserymen were required to give five days' notice when the stock was ready for inspection. Also, after the stock had been inspected, they were required to give in writing, with an invoice of the goods being shipped, five days' notice to the state board of horticulture before shipping. This has now been amended and the state board of horticulture is to designate the manner and time of inspection in each case, and the five days' notice before shipment has by amendments been made to apply only to uninspected stock.

There are even yet many objectionable and useless features in the horticultural laws of the state, which the Florists' and Nurserymen's Association hopes at some future time to see corrected.

The association is now endeavoring to arrange for competitive florists' and nurserymen's exhibits at the state fair this year. The annual meeting of the association will be held at Helena, during fair week, about September 26. W. J. Hugo has resigned the office of secretary and J. W. Mallinson has been appointed to succeed him.

PANSY FLOWERS EATEN.

Enclosed you will find some pansy blossoms, which are being eaten by some insect. We have tried to find it, but cannot locate anything. Please tell us what it is and the cure. W. & C.

This looks like the work of cutworms and not of any insect. As these work at night, you would be unlikely to see them, unless you scratched the soil away around the bases of the plants, when you would probably discover some of these arch pests curled up there. Provided cutworms are the cause of the damage, you can lay a poisoned mash of fresh shorts moistened with molasses and water, to which is added some Paris green. Cutworms seem to enjoy this diet. Another plan, which entails a little more work, but which would probably prove more effectual, is to secure some carbon bisulphide. Make holes eighteen inches apart each way and pour half a spoonful of the liquid in each hole, immediately covering the hole. This carbon is best applied when the soil is wet. As it is an explosive, do not use naked lights when applying it. Have no fear that it will do the least damage to the plants. Carbon bisulphide costs about 25 cents per pound at wholesale. The cans must be always kept tightly corked, as the carbon otherwise would speedily evaporate.

STOCKS UNDER GLASS.

Will you please give instructions when to plant stocks, what kind and how to handle for the best results in a greenhouse? Will they grow well in the same temperature as carnations? Will they do best on benches or in the ground?
A. H. B.

Stocks for culture under glass can be sown any time from the early part of August until April. If sown now, you would get flowers in June. Had they been started by the beginning of March, they would have flowered for Memorial day. There are a number of special forcing varieties for winter use. White Column, pure white, and Beauty of Nice, soft pink, are excellent for spring and early summer flowering. Nothing beats the Giant Ten Weeks, the most popular colors being white, delicate pink and lavender. For Memorial day trade the bright colors are in strong demand.

Sow the seeds in pans or shallow flats of light soil, with plenty of sand in it. If you use sand freely, there is less liability of the seedlings damping off. Pot off singly when of sufficient size and later transfer to beds or benches. For winter blooming, bench culture is much to be preferred. For later flowering, beds will answer equally well. Any good compost, such as will grow carnations, sweet peas, violets or mums, will answer for stocks. Pull out the single flowering plants as soon as they can be detected; they are almost valueless as cut flowers. Allow the Giant Ten Weeks' nine inches between the plants and fifteen inches between the rows. The early winter sorts can go 8x8 inches, as they branch little. A temperature of 48 to 50 degrees suits stocks; anything higher is not to be recommended. Purchase only the best imported seed, as cheap seed will give you too large a proportion of single flowers.

TO ALL WHO GROW

WASHINGTON

Here is a statement that will remove any doubt you may have about this new carnation, Washington, which we prove is the most profitable for any florist to grow; furthermore, you know the Enchantress family are the easiest to grow as well as being the "money makers."

Let us consider the first cost of the plants.

1000 Washington, dark pink sport of Enchantress.....	$75.00
1000 Lawson or any other standard dark pink.....	25.00
Difference in cost.....	$50.00

Washington or Enchantress will average 20 blooms per plant per season at the low average of 3c per bloom; 60c per plant; 1000 plants.....$600.00

Lawson or other dark pinks will average 15 good blooms per plant per season at the high average of 2c per bloom; 30c per plant; 1000 plants..... 300.00

Difference.....	$300.00
Gain in profits for Washington	50.00
Difference in cost of Washington and Lawson cuttings.....	$250.00
Washington net gain per 1000 plants.....

There is no use to argue, we give you plain figures that actually show you that an investment of $75.00 will bring you $250.00, or better, clear profit in one season with less trouble or care than any other variety of dark pink.

WASHINGTON is a true sport of Enchantress, a beautiful cerise, the exact Lawson color. Cuttings are strong, clean and healthy, ready for immediate delivery. Order today. We ship tomorrow.

$10.00 per 100; $20.00 per 250; $75.00 per 1000.

The Market.

For the last couple of weeks trade has been moving along well, but the usual lull just before Easter is starting to be felt. Stock is coming in in excellent condition and the best is always cleaned up. Tulips and daffodils are almost over. Sweet peas of good quality are coming in a little better. Beauties still are scarce; in fact, hardly any are offered.

The weather has been spring-like, with plenty of sun. This is bringing stock on fast and growers are experiencing difficulty in holding some plants back for Easter.

Various Notes.

J. H. Dunlop was removed from the hospital to his home last week and will soon be around again.

George H. Geraghty is in Boston this week. He will also visit New York.

Frank Smith, of Hamilton, spent a couple of days here on his way home from his honeymoon.

J. Slichter & Sons, of Greenwood avenue, have an excellent display of bedding plants this year. They also have some fine primulas.

C. Goulding & Sons and A. S. Jennings, of Deer Park, are busy booking orders for taking care of the graves on Mount Pleasant cemetery this year.

Mrs. Walker and F. S. Bakewell report a fair business in the north end.

McIntyre & Trimble are contemplating the sale of their business. There is nothing definite as yet, however.

E. A. F.

Middletown, N. Y.—Edward A. Lorentz has been improving and enlarging his establishment on Spring street. He has erected another good sized building and has extended his garden so that it includes the greater part of the block.

Council Bluffs, Ia.—J. F. Wilcox has turned his business into a corporation with $50,000 capital stock. Mr. Wilcox has five sons, all of whom will eventually be active in the company, and several of the older employees will be admitted to an interest.

PENNSYLVANIA Pink Boston Market

A seedling of Boston Market and Harlowarden that has been under test for the past five years and which has shown up so well under all conditions that I now feel confident it is one of the best commercial varieties and have pleasure in offering it for the first time for spring delivery 1911.

The color is a shade lighter pink than Lawson; form high built, much like Boston Market; stem long and graceful; healthy grower; blooms freely from November all through the season.

This new variety I am confident will prove a money-maker—a pink Boston Market—only much larger and better and destined to be one of the most popular commercial varieties.

Come and see it growing. I guarantee same to be in perfect health. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Demand is lifeless. There is practically nothing doing as far as the stores are concerned. The fakers have full swing of the market, and they are making prices to suit themselves. Some of the growers report that the supply of flowers is beginning to shorten up, and we all hope that the glut of carnations will soon be over. Roses are piling up, as the demand is slow, except for the best.

Blooming plants are selling satisfactorily. Many fine azaleas and hydrangeas are to be seen at some of the stores. Hyacinths in pans are selling exceptionally well.

There will be all kinds of lilies on the market for Easter, some particularly fine ones and some especially poor ones, just as in former years. Some of the plants will be quite short of stem. Giganteum and Formosa lilies are the only ones which are giving universal satisfaction.

The British Visitors.

Twelve of the leading horticulturists of England, who are touring the United States, visited Baltimore March 20. A banquet was held at the Hotel Rennert by the Gardeners and Florists' Club.

Earlier in the day the Britishers had visited the greenhouses of R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co., at White Marsh. After looking over the range of glass the visitors were entertained at luncheon by Mr. and Mrs. Richard Vincent, Jr. In the afternoon the party returned to Baltimore, where they were taken in automobiles through the leading parks.

The visitors present were: J. S. Brunton, of London, organizer of the trip to this country; James and William Brown, of Stamford; E. Barker, of Manchester; W. A. Cull, C. Engelmann, J. L. Gunn, L. M. Graves and G. Prickett, all leading horticulturists of England and fellows of the Royal Horticultural Society, and C. Pratley, S. South and J. Simpson, of London.

Various Notes.

A Strong Endorsement

for BEGONIA GLORY OF CINCINNATI

¶ E. G. Hill, one of the foremost growers of the time and well known by name, if not in person, to every florist in the country, in a paper read before the Illinois convention last February, said:

"Among miscellaneous plants J. A. Peterson is to be warmly congratulated on his new begonia, Glory of Cincinnati. While surpassing the parent in beauty of habit and of color, its splendid keeping qualities make it a house plant of wonderful effectiveness and durability, while the parent variety always gave concern for fear it might speedily 'go down' on removal from the greenhouse. GLORY OF CINCINNATI BEGONIA PROBABLY RANKS AS PREMIER OF THE ENTIRE LIST OF POT PLANTS."

Need we say more?

¶ For June delivery, 1911, we are now booking orders for Begonia Glory of Cincinnati, $25.00 per 100, $200.00 per 1000. Only strong young plants from single-leaf cuttings will be shipped. Your early order will secure the best stock. Colored plate sent free on application.

J. A. PETERSON, Westwood, Cincinnati, O.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Spring-like weather, with the accompanying winds and rain that we have been having, seems to make plenty of flowers—that is, if the appearance of the wholesale houses is anything to go by.

You can get anything you want and any quantity of it and almost make your own prices. Roses and carnations are certainly fine. Lilies are getting larger as the Formosa variety gradually disappears and giganteums take their place.

Tulips are here in all colors and fine valley; in fact, name what you want and you get it, both good and cheap.

Various Notes.

The retail shops have been doing nicely, as there has been quite a bunch of funeral work, and they are getting good stock cheap enough to satisfy them. All of the shops are filled with blooming plants and look well.

The McCallum Co. has been having fine lilac and Beauties.

The Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. is cutting some fine cattleyas, quantities of fine Killarney, White Killarney and Richmond roses.

Chas. Koenig is sending in quantities of fine tulips and Trumpets.

President John Jones of the Florists' Club wants a large attendance at the meeting Tuesday, April 4. The subject is "Easter Plants." He will have several members give short talks along these lines and then the report of those who visited the "Big Show" will be interesting, as the wise ones have all gone to see it.

Brother Clarke, of the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., is the only patriarch in the cut flower business in this city who can boast of having two grandchildren. Boys, be on hand at the next meeting of the Florists' Club, for the smokes.

Klinke & Werheim opened their new store in the Jenkins Arcade last Saturday. They have an attractive room and presented a creditable appearance and, if the number who called to congratulate them and express good wishes are any indication, they should have great success.

Monday was the worst day for wind we have experienced for a long time. The only report of damage so far is from Chas. Koenig, Millvale, where quite a lot of glass was blown out, and from the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., at Bakerstown, where quite a good deal of broken glass kept all hands busy making repairs.

Wm. Danzer, of John Breitmeyer's Sons, Detroit, Mich., was a recent visitor. Hoo-Hoo.

The Market.

Stock has been quite plentiful here for the last two weeks. Though there was a great deal of funeral work and other trade that used up lots of stock, there was hardly any line of stock that was not equal to the demand. Roses are of good color and the quality is all that could be desired. Killarney and White Killarney are taking the lead, both for quantity and quality; the demand is much heavier for them than for any other variety. Red roses are the only ones that have been a little short in supply.

Carnations have been quite plentiful and of good quality, and the demand has been active. Sweet peas are coming finely; several growers are just starting to cut from the second sowing and they have fine, long stems. Pot plants have been moving well and there has been a good supply in all seasonable stock. Azaleas are fine and they take the lead of all the better grades. Rhododendrons, spiræas, lilies, etc., are all in fine shape.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club held its last meeting, March 28, at the establishment of the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., and was entertained after the meeting at a luncheon. The dance given by the club March 22 proved to be another pleasant occasion and a success financially.

Sherman Stephens reports business good in funeral work.

Leo Miller has two houses of lettuce just ready for market, and this is keeping them on the jump.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. is cutting heavily in carnations, roses and sweet peas.

The Livingston Seed Co. reports counter trade for seeds, etc., quite heavy, and cut flowers are moving well.

The New Fern Nephrolepis Dreyerii

GROWN BY

G. DREYER, Elmhurst, Long Island, New York

THIS New Fern, when exhibited at the S. A. F. & O. H. Convention last August, received the following description: "Nephrolepis Dreyerii has many good points which will render it popular. It makes a quick growth, is compact, of good color, and stands considerable rough treatment, adapting itself to almost any condition. It is of the Scottii type, but not as stiff, the fronds drooping gracefully, giving the plant a very attractive appearance."

Price: 2 1/4-inch pots, per 100, $25.00; per 1000, $200.00.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

The Market.

There is nothing new to report about conditions here. The business done the last few weeks has been quite satisfactory. Funeral work supplies the bulk of the demand at present. Customers are beginning to call for rose plants for outdoor planting. Roses and carnations are in good demand, are fairly plentiful and of good quality.

Various Notes.

Julius Niednagel & Sons have been busy and at times used all the flowers they cut. Their delivery wagon was run into by an automobile last week and the shafts damaged considerably. It happened just as the driver was turning into the driveway at the greenhouses.

The Wm. Blackman Floral Co. is cutting lots of roses and carnations and enjoys a heavy call for them.

Ben Kramer reports a good business. The boy he formerly employed has begun work at Newburgh for Otto Kuebler, as he wished to learn the growing part of the business.

Henry Seymour has a good call for all of his carnations.

J. C. Elspersman's business is satisfactory.

Nellie Goodge is cutting some excellent carnations. E. L. F.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

At a recent meeting of florists and market gardeners, held in the Commercial Club rooms, plans were made for the planting of flowers in the streets and boulevards, in preparation for Civic Celebration week. The hope was expressed that this city might become known as a "flower city," as well as the Flour City. Addresses on the subject were made by Leroy Boughner, chairman of the committee in charge, and by H. L. Patthey and N. L. Hughes. G. F. Reeves, president of the Market Gardeners' Association, and George Libby, a former president, spoke on matters of interest to the trade.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Up to last week business was quite satisfactory, but has taken a tumble since then. Stock all around was plentiful, with demand on the decrease; consequently prices came down a few notches. The only scarce articles were American Beauties and Easter lilies.

Various Notes.

Spring was ushered in in grand style March 21, for the thermometer registered 77 degrees in the shade at 3 p. m. It remained fair till Sunday, at which time it rained, while Monday we were treated to snow with a quick drop in temperature.

J. M. Fox & Son, who have occupied the present location at 414 Milwaukee street for many years, have been notified that the property has been sold. J. Fox, Jr., says they have not yet decided what to do.

The Milwaukee Florists' Club is in much the same position, for the building in which the club held its meetings has been sold and is to be replaced by an up-to-date structure. At the meeting next Thursday, April 6, the trustees are expected to report the location of new quarters.

A visit to the C. C. Pollworth Co.'s greenhouses found everything looking fine; the carnation range especially never looked better and there is a steady cut in sight for the rest of the season. The young stock is also thrifty and clean.

Fred Schmeling, on the Blue Mound road, who was one of the first persons to grow lilies for the local market, has lost all faith in giganteum and says that he will grow Formosa lilies exclusively from now on. To judge by a batch of the latter which he now has, one must admit that they are fine.

At the Holton & Hunkel Co.'s greenhouses at Brown Deer, some exceptionally fine Killarney and White Killarney roses are being cut these days. This company reports a strong demand for Asparagus plumosus strings during the last two weeks.

The old reliable firm, GODFREY ASCHMANN, is not connected with any other firm and is more active than ever

Unexpected business prevented us from exhibiting our stock at the Boston Flower Show, March 25, but we kindly ask all of our many customers of the past, and now, if possible to come direct to our establishment, the Great Factory of Live Stock, a Plant Producing Mill that Never Closes, and make a personal inspection of our stock. The Germantown, Chestnut Hill, or Willow Grove trolley, at 13th and 8th and Market, will take you to West Ontario street and from there walk two squares east.

Prepare for Easter

Keep cool! Don't worry! Don't be downhearted! Cheer up! Your old, reliable friend of Philadelphia, Godfrey Aschmann, thinks of you, takes care of you and provides for you in hard times, in war times, in all times. His big stock and his cheap prices of Easter stock will certainly pull you through Easter, 1911.

If you would know the fairest sight your eyes can ever see,
Where the most perfect plants are grown, to Aschmann's come with me.
Why! Ne'er since flowers began to bloom was such a glorious show
Of all the best that florists need found in one place to grow.
The lilies are the very best yet seen on Easter day.
Azaleas are whole sheets of flowers, perfect in every way.
The Araucarias matchless are, so are the ferns all green.
With bulbs, and plumed Spiraea, the best you've ever seen.
And Aschmann gives a challenge, let every florist hear.
For flowers or prices, either, no rival does he fear.
If you wish to gather dollars like violets in the spring,
Then send your largest order, his plants the cash will bring.

Our reputation in growing Easter plants for the wholesale market, to which we ship all over the entire country, Canada and Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans, for many years past, is sufficient guarantee to prove our ability.

No joke—we have this year an immense stock of Lilies—Lilies to burn, to beat the band. Order now

Easter Lilies, Lilium multiflorum, the genuine Japanese Easter Lily, directly imported by us. We have a friend in Japan who looks after our interests there. He picks out for us only the good, healthy ones, and marks them while they are growing, the 10-in. bulbs, and therefore he ships to us the cream of the plants of Japan. We have lilies this year to burn; can supply, if nothing happens, every customer and others who want lilies. If you see them growing in our greenhouses you must all admit they are "crack-jacks." We sell them cheap, too. Where other florists get 15c per bud, we only charge you 10c per bud, for plants in 6-in. pots, having 5, 8, 10 and more buds to the plant. Plants under 5 buds, 12c per bud, 6-in. pots; in all heights, green as grass, good foliage from bottom up. Owing to lilies getting dearer every year, fully 30 per cent of them have to be dumped (we only keep the healthy ones for our customers and others), lily growing is not profitable and, as we sell our lilies cheap, it would be very much appreciated if some other plants would be included in the order.

Spiraea Gladstone for Easter

What is a Home? What is a Store? What is a Church? What is an Easter present without having a few plants of the so much admired and so greatly in demand Spiraea Gladstone? Oh, those charming sprays of beautiful pure white flowers! And the foliage, too, with its waxy, deep green color is a jewel in itself. Mixed with beautiful lilies and other blooming plants it will complete the flower decorations for your happy, joyful Easter of 1911. Knowing the great demand for this plant the past Easters, when not half our customers could be supplied, we are well prepared this year for the rush and in spite of the scarcity last fall in Holland when other florists' supplies were cut short by Holland growers, we were fortunate in obtaining enough of the bulbs to fill two houses and we are able to supply all incoming orders promptly; 5½, 6 to 7-in. pots, full of buds and flowers, and some are as big as a wash tub, 35c, 50c, 75c and $1.00 each; dozen or more the same.

Go to Headquarters for Azaleas

Azalea Indica is a specialty with us, grown for us under contract by an Azalea specialist in Belgium for the last twenty years. Have four houses full of the choicest. Only best well-known American varieties are imported, and are now in excellent condition, covered with buds, just right for Easter. We ship only good stock, full of buds and flowers.

What is the name of the best double pink azalea? Mme. Van der Cruyssen is the name, originated by the well-known azalea specialist Mr. Van der Cruyssen of Belgium. Millions are raised every year and shipped to every point of the globe from Belgium. We have a big stock on hand of this so well-known and favorite variety in tip top condition. Every plant is as round as an apple, covered with buds, just right for Easter trade. 6 to 7-in. pots, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00 each. Have only a limited number of small sizes, so the larger ones, such as the $1.25, $1.50 and $2.00 sizes, must be taken in connection with the 75c and $1.00 sizes.

Deutsche Perle. This is the best pure double white, 6-in. pots, 50c, 75c, $1.00 to $1.50.

Bernard Andrea alba (white). We have mostly big plants, $1.50, $2.00 to $3.00 each; a few smaller sizes, 75c, $1.00 to $1.25; Niobe, also white, 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00 each. Vervaeana, De Schryveriana (double variegated), 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $2.00 to

$2.50. Simon Mardner, 50c, 75c to $1.00. Empereur du Bresil, 75c to $1.00. Anna Gunkel, pure double white, 75c to $1.00.

Pres. Oswald de Kerchove, $1.00, $1.25 to $2.00. Empress of India, 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00. Apollo (red), 50c, 60c, 75c to $1.00. Other good varieties, such as Helene Thelmann, etc., 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00. When we are out of one color, we send the next similar color; also, if we are out of the size ordered, we send the next size either above or below the price mentioned.

Hydrangea Otaksa never was as good as this year, green as grass, full of buds, every branch stocked up. 5½, 6 to 7-in. pots, 35c, 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25 to $1.50.

Murillo Tulips, double, pinkish pearl, valued very highly as a pot tulip, 3 bulbs in a 4-in. pot, $1.80 per dozen pots; $14.00 per 100; right for Easter.

Tournesol Tulips, best double tulips, variegated, three bulbs in a 4-in. pot, $1.80 per dozen pots; $14.00 per 100; right for Easter.

Primula Obconica. 5-in., $2.00 to $2.50 per dozen.

Cinerarias for Easter

Readers, just a second! I wish to call your attention to a house full of Cineraria Hybrida Grandiflora for Easter, which has no equal. If you are not fortunate enough to see them growing in our establishment, then just imagine yourself in Paradise, a flower garden in Eden, your eyes feasting on a mass of flowers of many various high colors. This is the condition of our Cineraria house at Easter time, with our new improved strain, with many thousands 6-in. pot plants of medium tall sizes; some of the plants having immense heads of flowers, twice as big as those of the ordinary varieties, the plants being as big as a bushel basket; 6-in. pots, 25c, 35c, 50c, 75c and $1.00 each.

Ipomoea Noctiflora, purest white moonflower, for which we have a world-wide reputation, now ready, 2½-in. pots, $5.00 per 100.

Hyacinths, four best colors, King of the Blues (dark blue), Grand Maitre (light blue), Gertrude (best pink), La Grandesse (best white), right for Easter, in cold frame, 4-in. pots, 10c to 12c.

ASTER SEED, SEMPLE'S BRANCHING.
Mr. Phillips, Florist, Syracuse, N. Y., advises us that the aster seed purchased from us produced blooms that carried away the first prize at the last N. Y. State Fair. In the growing and the selection of this seed we exercised the most painstaking care, positively allowing only two or three ideal blooms per plant, to mature seeds. We have a small amount of this same seed in stock and will sell it only in mixture of about 1000 seeds, comprising pure white, lavender, pink and purple—about one-third the mixture being pure white. Price, per packet of 1000 seeds, 35 cts.; 4 packets for $1.00.

IS AZALEA MOLLIS HARDY?

Why is it that Azalea mollis, advertised in all the catalogues as hardy, winter-kills in southern Kentucky, or will it come up from the roots again?
J. E. R.

Azalea mollis should prove perfectly hardy in your climate, as it grows and thrives in much colder states than you are located in. It is possible that it may be less winter's cold than summer's drought which has killed your plants. Give any others which you may plant free summer cultivation. A mulch of partly decayed leaves will also help in keeping the roots cool and moist. Many of these azaleas, grown in low, black muck lands on the European continent, while excellent for forcing purposes, are often failures outdoors, just as are many so-called hardy roses when similarly grown. Greenhouse Heating.

CAPACITY OF BOILER.

I have a tubular boiler, of locomotive type and containing seventy-five square feet of heating surface. At present it heats a house 16x50 feet, used for a general stock of pot plants. How much more glass will this boiler handle, at carnation temperature, in this Ohio climate? C. C. M.

In a house 16x50 feet a temperature of 50 degrees can be secured with 250 square feet of radiating surface if hot water is used, and 150 square feet if the house is heated with steam. For a temperature of 60 degrees the amount of radiation should be increased nearly one-third. With conditions fairly favorable, a boiler of the size mentioned should be able to heat nearly twice your present amount of space to the temperature required for carnations.

CRUDE OIL AS FUEL.

I always appreciate the information to be found in The Review and I wish at this time to ask a few questions on a subject that is of interest to many florists on the Pacific coast. Can crude oil be profitably used as fuel where the heating of greenhouses is done by the hot water system and where the cost of cord-wood is, on the average, $5 per cord and the price of soft coal is $6 to $9 per ton? About how much oil represents the equivalent of a cord of wood or a ton of average soft coal? What would be the average cost of installation of oil burners in a Great Northern boiler, 46 by 56 in. by 12 ft.?

Electric power is obtainable. Would it be possible or of advantage to use compressed air as a substitute for steam and have an electric motor to furnish the pressure for spraying the oil? Would such an installation pay in a range which contains only 10,000 square feet of glass? Oil can be had for $1 per barrel. I am located in northwestern Oregon. J. G. B.

To get the best results with crude oil, it is usually necessary to connect the burner with a steam jet. At the prices given for wood and coal, crude oil would be found an economical fuel at $1.25 to $1.50 per barrel, and at $1 per barrel it would, of course, be materially cheaper.

compressed air would serve to spray the oil and it would form quite a satisfactory substitute for the steam spray. While relatively cheap for a plant containing 10,000 square feet of glass, it would be even cheaper in a larger plant. The cost of installing oil burners, including the expense for an air compressor, motor, etc., should not be much more than $100.

Henry Emunds, of the West End Floral Park, Belleville, called Saturday, March 25. Mr. Emunds said they are selling a great many of their Yellow Tousey cuttings. They have a large stock of them for present delivery. All the Belleville florists are busy now with spring trade.

Fred Foster, of the Paris Floral Co., reports that their present quarters have become too small for them, so they have leased the next store and will combine the two in one. The work will be started at once.

Vesey's consignments of orchids at Angermueller's are meeting with good sales. This house also had good consignments of roses and carnations last week.

All the plant stands at Union Market are now alive with blooming plants. Messrs. Carr, Wilkinson and others say they have had a good week, considering the early season.

Frank Gorly, buyer for Grimm & Gorly, says they had a busy week in their cut flower department. They are handling a great lot of bedding plants this season.

F. W. Bruenig and Messrs. Schray and Beyer had plenty to do last week with decorations for spring openings for the large department stores downtown.

The Retail Florists' Association will hold its regular monthly meeting Monday, April 3, in the Knights of Columbus hall. President Sanders is looking for a large attendance to transact some important business.

Saturday, March 25, at noon, Messrs. Weber, Miller, Meinhardt and Ammann left over the Big Four railroad to represent St. Louis at the National Flower Show at Boston. O. G. Koenig left a few days before in order to go with the Chicago delegation.

STEAM TRAPS

RETURN — NON-RETURN — VACUUM CONDENSER

YOU, Mr. Florist, can save fuel—cut down labor—and grow better flowers by installing a Morehead Return Steam Trap.

In the first place, there is only a few degrees difference between the steam going into your heating system and the water of condensation coming from the returns.

It is very foolish, therefore, to cool this water down to a low temperature to pump back to the boilers when, by the use of the Morehead Steam Trap, the same water of condensation can be returned directly to the boilers at a very much less expense than by any other method and without losing any of the heat contained in the condensation.

In the first place, to make steam from water, fuel is required to bring this water to the boiling point under the required steam pressure.

For every ten degrees added to the water by any other means, there is a saving of 1% on fuel.

You can readily see that the cooling of the condensation from 250 degrees down to 212 or less, to accommodate your pump, means a considerable loss of heat, fuel and money.

A MOREHEAD Return Steam Trap will put this water back into your boiler at a still higher temperature than 250 degrees, and on 90% less steam required by a pump for returning the same quantity of water.

You then have a combined return trap and boiler feed outfit that will prove out to be one of the best investments you ever made.

The temperature in your houses is always kept absolutely uniform, enabling you to grow better flowers by reason of the improved conditions.

The Morehead Trap, when once installed, requires little or no attention, thus enabling you to dispense with extra help necessary to keep your heating system in good order.

If you are having condensation difficulties, or if you want to know about a better and more economical method of draining your particular steam lines, feeding your boilers and save on fuel, water and labor, write us for copy of "Trap Book," and our trial offer proposition.

The "Trap Book" tells how condensation troubles can be ended effectively, and considering results, most economically. It will give you some new ideas regarding steam and its distribution in the greenhouse.

Gentlemen:—

In reply to your favor of the 5th asking how we liked the two eight inch eclipse Reducing Valves we bought of you two years ago. These two valves have been in constant use since then and have given the very best kind of service. The temperatures have varied so much out doors during the past two winters that it was a great saving having these reducing Valves working so nicely that we could control our temperature inside the houses with very little fluctuation. A modern heating plant could not get along without them.

Respectfully,

who had charge of a fund made up by the local retailers and wholesalers to present W. C. Smith with a suitable wedding present, selected a handsome punch bowl of solid silver and on Friday night, March 24, presented the happy couple with it, R. J. Windler making the presentation speech. Both Mr. and Mrs. Smith were taken by surprise.

The west end florists say that trade has been somewhat quiet since Lent began, with a lack of social work, but other work has been good, especially for funerals. Blooming plants are selling well and they are making a great show with them.

C. A. Kuehn was busy last week shipping supply orders. W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co., H. G. Berning and G. H. Angermueller also say that last week was fairly good in all departments.

Frank Fillmore and Carl Beyer, south St. Louis florists, paid a visit to their old friend John Steidle, at Olivette, last week. After inspecting Mr. Steidle's well kept place, they visited the plants of A. Jablonsky and C. E. De Wever, close by, and in this way spent a most pleasant afternoon.

The florists along Grand avenue, Messrs. Bentzen, Waldbart, Ayers, Egeling, Bergstermann and Beyer have their show houses filled with extra fine blooming plants. R. J. Windler and the Metropolitan Floral Co. have no show houses, but they make elegant window displays of these plants. They all report a good trade.

S. Seligman, representing Wertheimer Bros., New York city, was a recent visitor.

The Market.

Business last week was not quite as brisk as it has been, due perhaps to its being just at the change of seasons.

Flowers of every description are plentiful and excellent in quality.

Various Notes.

E. A. Feters had a distinguished visitor in his store last week in the person of Wm. Jennings Bryan. Mr. Bryan was tendered a banquet at the Fellowship Club and the table decorations so struck his fancy that he made it a point to meet the floral artist under whose direction they were carried out.

Something really novel will be seen on Detroit streets when the automobile now being built for the Bemf Floral Co. makes its appearance. A handsome body, conforming to the tastes of A. Pochelon, is being built upon a Federal chassis. All the larger Detroit retailers will soon be using autos for delivery purposes.

The Flower Shop recently put into service a small, but good looking, delivery auto. It has a specially constructed body on a Cadillac chassis.

The largest number of palms ever used at one decoration in this city were distributed throughout the large Crowley-Millner Co. store last Sunday by B. Schroeter's force of men. Thousands of carnations were also used, all the employees being presented with a few flowers as a corsage bouquet. Mr. Schroeter also has the decorations for the spring openings of the Traver-Bird Co. and Newcomb Endicott & Co. This accounts for this firm not being represented at Boston.

An error appeared last week in the report of the reorganization of J. Breitmeyer's Sons. The corporation has been dissolved and a copartnership formed in its stead, the members being the same, namely, Philip Breitmeyer, Harry Breitmeyer and Herman Klagge. H. S.

Hillsdale, Mich.—Thomas Evans has taken charge of Hillsdale Floral Park as grower and greenhouse manager.

Nature's Best Fertilizer is Sheep Manure

Sheep's Head Brand furnishes the valuable organic matter and humus necessary to grow crops. It improves the mechanical conditions of the soil.

Makes compact clay more open and porous, makes light, sandy soils more retentive of moisture, keeps soluble plant foods within reach of rootlets of growing vegetation. Farmers, orchardists, florists, truck and market gardeners should send for our book "Fertile Facts" to learn how properly and most effectively to fertilize the soil.

MAKE MORE MONEY

There are few soils that do not need Lime; there are no greenhouses in which the proper and liberal use of Lime will not pay for itself a hundred times over.

This Lime I am offering you is not to be confounded with the ordinary Lime; it is hydrated, pulverized to a powder, is put up in bags and can be kept for any length of time in a dry place.

A thousand pounds to an acre of ground, a three-inch potful to half a bushel of soil, a light sprinkle put over the soil in your benches will produce results that would make it cheap at any price.

Send me $4.00 for half a ton, you will find it the best investment you ever made, and do it now, for there is not enough profit in it for me to continue advertising. but I want every florist to know about it and would like every florist who reads this to try at least half a ton.

GALVANIZED IRON WORK.

There has been some discussion among heating experts as to the advisability of using galvanized pipe for heating greenhouses, and there seems to be some difference of opinion as to how much resistance the galvanizing produces as a non-conductor of heat. I happen to have some galvanized pipes in use for steam heating and have looked into the matter thoroughly. My conclusions may, therefore, be of interest to some of the growers. I find the difference in heat radiation is slight and hardly worth considering. In fact, I believe a galvanized pipe radiates more heat than either a well painted pipe or a rusty one.

Another point that may well be mentioned is that even if there is a trifle more radiation from new black pipe, there is a corresponding saving of steam in galvanized pipe. That is, even if the pipes do not throw off quite so much heat, the steam does not condense so fast inside the pipes and there is less difficulty in keeping them replenished with fresh steam; therefore there is no difference in the amount of fuel used. The only difference is that of first cost of installing the pipe.

Personally, I believe it would be better if all the heating pipes were galvanized. A galvanized pipe is galvanized inside and outside. If you paint a pipe, the paint is only on the outside and will stick there only a short time. The common black steel pipe on the market nowadays is pretty poor stuff and extremely short-lived around a greenhouse. Wrought-iron pipe, the old-fashioned, heavy, stiff kind, can not be had any more, and this is to be regretted, as it was almost as good as galvanized pipe.

There is not enough of galvanized material used in greenhouse construction. I do not see why people use so much black iron work and then spend more money in painting it than it would cost to get galvanized ware. Galvanized pipe gutter posts are the best posts on the market today. They require no paint at all, nor any cast base to set them in, as they will not rust off at grade level unless ashes, cinders, etc., are placed around them. They are as strong and stiff as a cast post, or more so, and are the cheapest of all, considering the cost of painting, which must be done again later. Galvanized scratch pipe, culled out of best grade, is the kind used for gutter posts and can be purchased cut at the right lengths.

The same can be said of the purlin supports. Galvanized purlins, whether of using the black pipe in such places, where it is carrying water most of the time and is often lying in the dirt. I heard of a grower recently, near Chicago, who in building had his angle-iron purlins and his ventilating machinery all galvanized, as well as much other iron and steel work about the greenhouse.

Galvanized hinges, nails and screws can be purchased of the dealers in greenhouse material, and common nails, etc., should not be used at all. I could never be induced to put in a trussed house unless all rods, nuts, etc., were galvanized. Cast iron does not rust away, and good wrought iron, the kind we used to get, is almost as good, but the more the metal is worked the more liable it is to rust. H. G.

LAND SALT.

What is land salt and how should it be used? E. M.

Land salt is a somewhat coarse brand of salt, which can be advantageously broadcasted on land about to be seeded down to hay. It kills out quantities of weeds and does not injure the grass. It is also valuable for applying to asparagus beds, and for spreading on roadways to kill out weeds. It is well to apply it in dry weather, as it will then kill out weeds more effectually. C. W.

Nantucket, Mass.—Fred Fisher and Henry Fisher are each erecting a greenhouse here.

Pittsfield, Mass.—John White, on New West street, and Miss Mary Grey, his bookkeeper, were married March 20. Mr. White has a prosperous, well established business. For several years he has defied all efforts of the Consolidated railroad to buy his property for a railroad freight yard, and now the company owns land all about him. Although he has been offered a large sum for the land, he has steadily refused to sell.

Independence, Mo.—A. Blankenfield, at Fiftieth street and Belinda avenue, succeeded recently in obtaining from the Kansas Natural Gas Co. the sum of $1,000 in payment for greenhouse stock that was frozen several years ago, when the gas company was under contract to supply the necessary fuel for the heating of the houses. Mr. Blankenfield stated that in March, 1906, the gas pressure was so low that his plants froze and the cost to him was $4,000. He sued the company, with the result that there was a compromise made for $1,000.

CHARLTON AND AMPELOPSIS.

John Charlton, of Rochester, was the first to offer Ampelopsis Veitchii in America. His recollections of the event were stirred by a recent note in the Gardeners' Chronicle, London, and he wrote the editor of that journal in part as follows:

"I claim to have been the first to introduce and offer for sale this charming climbing plant in the United States. I heard of Ampelopsis Veitchii when it was exhibited at the first Paris International Exhibition by the Messrs. Veitch, where it attracted much attention. It was exhibited growing on a slab of bark, and was beautiful and perfect in appearance. The plant was sent out by James Veitch & Sons in the fall of 1868 and spring of 1869. I procured plants of it, and, giving generous treatment and growing them on quickly, I soon had a good stock from cuttings. In October and November, 1869, I advertised it for sale in the Gardeners' Monthly, then published at Philadelphia. This periodical was edited by Thomas Meehan, a graduate of Kew, and a man possessed of unusual knowledge of trees, shrubs and plants, as well as of all matters relating to gardening, and whose memory I much revere. As the result of my advertising I sold two plants, but I was not discouraged, being sure it would be wanted in large quantities later on, and the results have borne out my anticipations. Its popularity here is increasing from year to year, and from my selling two plants in the fall of 1869, 2,500 plants of it are now required annually for our present needs. Ampelopsis Veitchii is a unique, wonderful climber, adapting itself to all circumstances, and, as you say, 'growing an outline of its own, and filling it in perfectly later on.' All things considered, I think it is the most serviceable climbing plant in existence; when planted in the right place it takes care of itself.

"When first introduced I used it quite freely in hanging baskets, vases, etc., with good effect, as it made a first-rate drooping plant. This variety has been extensively planted in and around Boston, where it has been dubbed the Boston ivy. It is also called the Japanese ivy, but is perhaps best known as Ampelopsis Veitchii, the name by which it will be known the longest. I do not care if the systematist calls it Ampelopsis tricuspidata, or Cissus, Vitis, Quinaria, Parthenocissus tricuspidata, or Psedera. Gardeners will have none of these names. They will continue to call it Ampelopsis Veitchii as long as grass grows and waters run."

HYDRANGEAS COMING WHITE.

I should like to get some information about hydrangeas. I have about 700 5-inch and 6-inch pots of Otaksa coming into bloom. Some of them are matured in growth, I think, as they measure six and eight inches across the blooms, but they do not color up pink, as usual. So far they are almost plain white and they have been standing at this stage for the last two weeks. They are of my own growing and I have had them for the last four or five years, but this has never occurred before. Can you give me the cause of this, or give me some information as to coloring them up pink, so that they may be salable?
W. C. K.

The hydrangeas have been hard forced to get them in flower thus early and strong heat has a tendency to take the color out of the flowers. Give them a slightly cooler house, where they will be a little shaded from the direct rays of the sun. Do not give any waterings of strong liquid manure. The flowers will, I think, gradually become pink in color. The transition to pink from white is less rapid now than in summer. Strong heat and heavy feeding would each help to take the color out of the flowers.
C. W.

AZALEA DEUTSCHE PERLE.

Where white-flowered azaleas are needed early in the season, Deutsche Perle is one of the best of all to grow, as in a greenhouse temperature of 50 to 55 degrees it may be had in bloom by Christmas. The flowers, too, are of considerable substance, and though semi-double when fully expanded, they are in the bud state just like little rosebuds. This azalea is of rather looser growth than many varieties, owing to which the trusses of flowers can be cut with longer stems than many of them can. There is no other variety of which such numbers are sent to this country as Deutsche Perle.

Plymouth, Mass.—The greenhouse on the estate of Levy N. Mayer at Indian Bluffs, about ten miles south of town, was almost destroyed by fire March 16. The building was erected last fall. The loss was about $1,000.

Kankakee, Ill.—The greenhouses of Charles Schafer, covering almost an acre of ground, have been removed from their former location, near Electric park, to a tract of land west of the cemetery. The houses have also been greatly improved, especially in the arrangements for heating.

PRACTICALLY ALL GROWERS NOW REALIZE THAT BY FAR THE BEST MATERIAL FOR GREENHOUSE BENCHES IS

PECKY CYPRESS

It is like any other cypress except that it looks as though it were full of worm holes, but isn't; it is especially like other cypress in that it has to be open air dried in the south. It is dried until it weighs three pounds to the board foot, or 3,000 pounds to the thousand feet. Consequently 10,000 feet will make a minimum car. We can ship from our yards to the central states, or direct from the mills in Louisiana to florists in New England and to growers in the far west, and it is only a question of time when all growers will use it.

It doesn't take so very many feet of bench to call for a minimum car of pecky cypress. It comes 1x6 inches and the boards eight to twenty feet long. With about an inch between for drainage, a bench four feet wide will take seven boards, or three and one-half feet lumber measure for each lineal foot of bench. Side pieces bring it up to four and one-half feet. Consequently a minimum car, 10,000 feet of lumber, would suffice for only twenty-two benches 4x100. The average car contains 13,000 to 15,000 feet.

If you don't need a car yourself, get your neighbors to club in with you and order a car. :: ::

SOILS AS RELATED TO SPORTS.

Some time ago I told in The Review about a variegated sport of White Enchantress which I had found on one of my benches. I now have several plants of Alma Ward that have produced some fine variegated blooms and I have also had other varieties of carnations that have shown variegations during the last few years, or, in fact, ever since I have been in business as a grower.

Someone has suggested the possibility of the soil having something to do with the tendency toward sporting. Has this been made the subject of investigation? It certainly would be a matter worthy of careful research. There must be some law of nature which, if understood, could be profitably made use of in this connection. What do other readers of The Review know about this subject?

IVY ON GRAVES.

I planted several graves with hardy ivy during the spring of 1909 and have covered them for the last two winters. When they are uncovered this spring, should they be trimmed out or cut back to keep them within bounds? F. M.

Probably the ivy will be somewhat brown after being uncovered and exposed to the sun and wind for a few days. You need not worry about this, however, as the plants will soon make new growth sufficient to hide any imperfections. Merely cut them back to hold them within bounds and head back any much browned shoots, or straggling ones. C. W.

of this machine in Poehlmann Bros.' plant, at Morton Grove, Ill., showed that it did the work easier and in one-third of the time that it took with the type of machine they had been using. Not only does it raise easily, but it closes equally as quick; if you just start the hand wheel it runs down itself and checks its own speed as the sash are about to close.

You would have to see it work to appreciate what a neat, easy running, quick to handle, sure of results machine it is. This machine will operate 250 ft. continuous ventilation from the end of shaft; or, should you so desire, we can fix it so you can operate with same machine one end of house, open any height desired, leaving other end closed, and will open and close sash equally—no more chasing up and down walks when a storm comes up.

We can change your machine so that your present shafting and arms will be all right, and it will pay you in a short time to make the change, to say nothing of the saving thereafter for the years to come.

To the man who needs a Boiler

THE KROESCHELL GREENHOUSE BOILER

Here is the boiler that is making the most wonderful greenhouse heating record in the world. Florists and gardeners who have used other makes are constantly giving the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler the highest praise.

10,788,000 square feet of glass was equipped with the Kroeschell Boiler during the past five years. You will find the new 1910 model Kroeschell Hot Water Boiler in every state in the Union and Canada.

Our Eastern business has been exceedingly heavy the past season.

NOT

ORDER YOUR Kroeschell Boiler NOW

Kroeschell vs. Cast Iron Boilers

Over 1500 Cast Iron Boilers were replaced by the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler during the past six years. It is a common occurrence for a Kroeschell to replace two to four cast iron boilers at a single place; this is the CENTRAL HEATING SYSTEM PLAN, and has saved many florists hundreds of dollars per season in fuel alone, besides a big saving in labor.

OUR HEATING ENGINEER has probably had more practical experience in this line than any other greenhouse man, and we place his experience at your service.

NOT

WHAT THE USERS SAY

Kroeschell Replaces Three (3) Cast Iron Boilers.

We purchased of you this spring a No. 6 Kroeschell Boiler, which you guaranteed would take the place of three cast iron boilers. Well, the whole thing in a nutshell is this—your word is as good as gold. Night before last we had a severe storm of snow and sleet and a very high wind; we had not the least bit of trouble. We fired the last at 10 p. m., November 24th, and the next morning at 7 o'clock we looked at the houses and found it only 1 degree less than when we fired the last coal, 9 hours earlier. If this isn't magnificent work and a good test, we would be pleased to hear from anyone else that could furnish a better boiler. We know if parties wishing a boiler would get one from you they never would try any other. We think in 5 years' running of this boiler we will have the price saved in the difference in our coal bill. Wishing you the best of success, we remain,

Very truly yours,

ADAM LAUB & SON, Hughsonville, N. Y.

Kroeschell Boiler Better than Tubular Boilers or Cast Iron Boilers.

WASHINGTON COURT HOUSE, OHIO. Have used upright boiler, tubular boiler and cast iron boiler. The Kroeschell Boiler heats up better and easier than any other boiler we have ever had anything to do with. If we ever buy another, it will certainly be a Kroeschell. Very truly yours,

POOLE & PURILLANT.

THE KROESCHELL PIPING SYSTEM—

Circulation is perfect. Cheaper and better than 1, 1½, 1½ or 2-in. threaded pipe. Overcomes all the disadvantages of 4-in. cast iron pipe. No deep boiler pits required.

THE KROESCHELL GENERATOR—

Cures sluggish circulation. Water travels three to five times faster. Saves fuel. Prevents boiling over. Water can be heated to 240 degrees without boiling, making it possible to have steam temperatures in your piping if wanted. Greatly improves systems having long mains and coils. Can be connected to any hot water system, no matter what kind of boiler or piping is used. Easy to install—simply attach to your present expansion pipe.

WHAT THE USERS SAY

Cast Iron Boilers Cause Freeze-out—Kroeschell Boilers no Worry.

I bought a No. 2 boiler in 1902. Takes care of 7000 sq. ft. of glass—would take care of 2000 more. I have had a cast iron boiler, but it broke down twice in four years, always in the coldest weather. It broke down Dec. 29, 1904, and I lost all my stock in consequence. I have now two No. 2 and one No. 6 Kroeschell Boilers and do not worry about their breaking down.

GRANT NEWPORT, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Kroeschell Does Our Work Easier than Cast Iron Boilers and Saves 20 to 25% Fuel.

The No. 4 boiler is heating 10,000 sq. ft. of glass—it would take care of 13,000 sq. ft. easy. Have no trouble to keep temperature of 50 and 60 degrees in coldest weather. The boiler has given perfect satisfaction. We had two cast-iron boilers, one rated for 1200 ft. of pipe and one rated for 1500 ft. These boilers never did the work at their best and when the greenhouses were new. According to our experience with yours, we will save 20 to 25 per cent of fuel.

HILD BROS., Lake Forest, Ill.

Try the Kroeschell First—It's Ahead of Them All.

I have had eight or ten other types of boilers. The Kroeschell is the best I have ever used. Your boiler heats the water very quickly—almost as fast as steam. Yours very truly,

THE "UMBRELLA" ROSE

Some day, let us hope, the process of color printing will be so perfected that it can be applied to newspaper work. Nothing short of the time-consuming processes of printing will do justice to such a subject as the rambler rose shown in the accompanying illustration, photographed in a flower store last Easter. The plant was grown in Philadelphia, but it was a feature of a retailer's display in a western city and attracted much attention, not only because of the unusual shape, but because of the profusion of bloom, the delicacy of coloring and the artistic effect created by the mingling of the pink and white ribbon with the green foliage and the pink and white blooms. The "Umbrella" rose was the name applied to it by nearly everyone who visited the store.

Such plants are not ready sellers in anything but the minority of flower stores. This plant had a selling price of $15, of which a good part was accounted for by the fine gold finished basket, zinc lined, in which the pot fitted with exactness, being effectually concealed by the mossy covering over the soil. A few such plants are a specially good investment from an advertising point of view. Even though the plants be not sold, they serve to relieve the sameness of the stock of Easter staples—the lilies, the azaleas and the bulbous stock; they give the customer something to exclaim over before turning to the serious business of purchasing, and they give almost every visitor something to tell his friends about. Help them to talk.

EASTER WINDOWS.

Choosing the Accessories.

Gray and brown might not be a first choice for Easter colors themselves, but nobody will deny that they are excellent settings for the spring tints of lavender and pink. There are no better colors, then, for baskets and pot covers, neglecting for once the too trying pinks, which fit the Lorraine begonias, but quarrel with cyclamens and primulas. These grays and browns agree with the yellows, oranges, reds and heliotropes alike. When it comes to buying supplies, beware how you indulge in brilliant mats, basket trimmings and pot covers. For one thing, they fade soon, and at best are suitable for perhaps only one shade or tint of a brilliant color. More than this, an accessory which rivals the color of the flower detracts from, rather than adds to, its beauty. Invest the same amount of money in cocoa fiber and bark covers. Although more expensive, they are also more refined. You can soon educate your trade to add enough to the selling price of the plant to cover the cost of the cover.

Cheap Trifles or Real Art.

Refrain from investing in cheap trifles and you will find the money for the nese screen as a background. A fair number of plants will thus make as large a display as twice the number without some such assistance.

Spiræas are best displayed in tall groups, rising here and there from a field of shorter plants. For another plan of the same style, cut snapdragons, carried higher and set in a field of spiræas, would make a good display.

A good special Easter design could be devised of a tall, standing cross of Easter lilies rising from a field of purple and violet cinerarias.

An Easter Egg.

Anything in the egg line, of course, makes an especially suitable Easter feature. If you can not get an egg frame made, fit up a frame of heavy wire screen. Cut a jagged hole where the chick is supposed to pick its way out. Cover the outside with a layer of sphagnum and also fill the inside solidly, except where the cut is and as far back as can be seen. Cover the outside with one kind of cream or white flowers—with carnations if it be a large egg. Three feet in length, completed, is a good show size. Finish the interior, as far as it shows, with yellow or pink. Some nice workmanship will be necessary to get a good shape on the egg and to finish the edges and interior.

Set the egg in the window in a thicket of pussy willows or fruit blossoms. As a setting, arrange a prominent group of lilacs and hydrangeas or Easter lilies. Let the foreground be composed of a path of green moss leading from the egg. Along this path a troop of stuffed ducklings, in interesting poses, can be placed, the head of one barely appearing from the inside, one or more in the act of jumping out, and the others making their way along the path in Indian file. Border this path with low pans of bulbous flowers or ferns. With a little freshening each day, this design will last a week or so, and is a good reminder for the week before Easter. If it could be arranged to have live ducklings, they, of course, would add to the effect.

Displays of Low Plants.

It is a mistaken idea that the low growing plants must always be displayed in a low position. True, a portion of the display must be well down on the floor, but if an unbroken line of the chosen color is carried from the lower mass as high as practicable, they are well displayed.

Suppose we are arranging a window

WHAT THE USERS SAY

Kroeschell Replaces Three 3 Cast Iron Boilers.

We purchased of you this spring a No. 6 Kroeschell Boiler, which you guaranteed would take the place of three cast iron boilers. Well, the whole thing in a nutshell is this: your word is as good as gold. Night before last we had a severe storm of snow and sleet and a very high wind; we had not the least bit of trouble. We fired the last at 10 p. m., November 21st, and the next morning at 7 o'clock we looked at the houses and found it only 1 degree less than when we fired the last coal, 9 hours earlier. If this isn't magnificent work and a good test, we would be pleased to hear from anyone else that could furnish a better boiler. We know it parties wishing a boiler would get one from you; they never would try any other. We think in 5 years' running of this boiler we will have the price saved in the difference in our coal bill. Wishing you the best of success, we remain,
Very truly yours,

Kroeschell vs. Cast Iron Boilers

Over 1500 Cast Iron Boilers were replaced by the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler during the past six years. It is a common occurrence for a Kroeschell to replace two to four cast iron boilers at a single place; this is the CENTRAL HEATING SYSTEM PLAN, and has saved many florists hundreds of dollars per season in fuel alone, besides a big saving in labor.

OUR HEATING ENGINEER has probably had more practical experience in this line than any other greenhouse man, and we place his experience at your service.

Cast Iron Boilers Cause Freeze-out—Kroeschell Boilers no Worry.

I bought a No. 2 boiler in 1902. Takes care of 7000 sq. ft. of glass would take care of 20000 more. I have had a cast iron boiler, but it broke down twice in four years, always in the coldest weather. It broke down Dec. 29, 1904, and I lost all my stock in consequence. I have now two No. 2 and one No. 6 Kroeschell Boilers and do not worry about their breaking down.

The No. 4 boiler is heating 10,000 sq. ft. of glass—it would take care of 13,000 sq. ft. easy. Have no trouble to keep temperature of 50 and 60 degrees in coldest weather. The boiler has given perfect satisfaction. We had two cast-iron boilers, one rated for 1200 ft. of pipe and one rated for 1500 ft. of Lorraine begonias. After covering the floor space with a solid group of the plants, use a line of gilded hanging baskets or raffia hangers, one above another, irregularly from the ceiling to the floor. Make a screen effect of these hanging baskets across the rear of the window. Break the floor group occasionally with Farleyense ferns.

A lilac and green window is a pleasant change after the aggressive coloring of the begonias. Purple and violet cinerarias may form the principal attraction, with cut lilacs and Sprenger plants.

An Easter lily window may be arranged with two lines starting from each front corner of the window and extending far to the rear, perspective fashion. At the rear place a showy group of hydrangeas, and plant either side of the lily line with valley, hyacinths or tulips. Gertrude Blair.

BASKETS OF RAMBLERS.

The plant basket shown on this page was one of the most attractive seen in a Chicago flower store last Easter, where it was tagged with a selling price of $12. The braided basket was of pink and white, excellently in keeping with the character of the occasion. The Crimson Ramblers were splendidly flowered and the spiraea at the fullness of its actual article on display; when the customer has made his selection the plant is tagged and set away in the storeroom for delivery and its place is taken by another arrangement, whether or not of similar character, for the processes of selling and making up are proceeding simultaneously.

EASTER BASKETS.

The Early Preparations.

Be careful of every detail of the coloring of your Easter baskets. If you must use a heliotrope-tinted basket for quid azaleas, restrain it or cover it with new material. Cut off any faded straw trimmings and wrap the handle with fiber ribbon or satin.

Pans for baskets should be planned some weeks in advance of Easter, with due reference to the coloring and general adaptability of the plants to one another. The decorations can be added quickly at any time.

The average holiday plant basket is filled as full as the pan will permit and some on top, stuffed to the brim. The aim seems to be to fill every inch of space, from the bottom of the pan to the top of the handle, religiously setting every plant bolt upright and aiming at a pyramid shape for the group.

center of the basket, but of the group—and assemble under it, close together, two or three plants of lower growing habit, to avoid rivaling the kentia in height or style.

As to coloring, there are as many tones of green as of any other color. There are violet greens, red greens, yellow greens, blue greens, in innumerable variations and combinations, and one should be as careful of these as we ever are of reds and scarlets and pinks. With the kentia we will group a short rambler rose, a table fern or two and a Rex begonia, and on the far edge a sprinkling of white crocus, through which a duckling is pushing his way to see the world.

Other Arrangements.

A bulbous basket will take in a combination such as Easter lilies, yellow tulips, crocus and purple pansies. Tiny square and round baskets of pansies and crocus would surely sell, while a more elaborate arrangement of ericas, roses, or bulbous stock and Farleyense would be higher priced.

Another: A Boston fern with a marguerite plant and candidum lilies. Trim a high-handled basket with tree catkins, a spray or two of peach blossoms in an underground vase, a Spiraea Gladstone and some Murillo tulips.

Azaleas are better with no company in baskets, unless it is a handle trimming of outdoor material, and a moss and pansy plant covering for the soil.

Whatever grouping is undertaken, let no one plant interfere with the lines of another. Let them fall into the same lines and groups of lines. Be liberal with vacancies and openings among the foliage. Tilt a plant against the edge of the basket once in a while. Make the view agreeable from every side of the basket. Gertrude Blair.

WHERE EXTREMES MEET.

In the Easter stock of the up-to-date flower store there must be a meeting of extremes—some customers demand the extreme of simplicity, while others are not to be satisfied with anything less than the most elaborate plant combination the florist can provide. As an example of extremes, take the big basket of azaleas, Souper roses, primulas and crotons figured in the illustration on page 29, and for its antithesis there is the crocus and scilla arrangements on page 31. These simple flowers of spring have proved good sellers among the class of trade of discriminating taste. In the illustrations both crocuses and scillas are in pottery in the form of baskets, with grape embellishments. Of course these high-class receptacles represent rather more in the selling price than do the flowers themselves, and such stock is not to be offered where the class of trade handled will not stand for a fair price.

On the other hand, in the big combination baskets the receptacle usually represents only a small part of the total cost of the arrangement. This class of thing usually appeals most strongly to the flower buyers who have not had their money long enough to feel quite natural with it; they are willing to give up $15, or $25 or more, providing the arrangement is sufficiently showy. It must be large and it must be full of plants. The ribbon is almost as essential as any other part of the combination.

For the average flower store a happy medium is to be sought. There should beauty. There were in addition several plants of Dr. Encke azalea and some ferns and adiantum. The ribbon was dark green, a shade darker than the foliage of the spiraea and just a shade lighter than the rose foliage. A counterpart of the basket without the ribbon was not nearly so effective.

be, in every Easter display, some big, showy baskets and there should be a number of things that can be sold for 50 cents to $1, but the bulk of the Easter business is to be done with plant arrangements that can be sold at from $3 to $5. They must look to be worth the money, so it is well to guard against the use of too high priced accessories. Don't use baskets that cost so much you cannot add the cost and at least half as much more to the selling price of the plants you use for filling. Also, buy a few of many styles of basket pot cover, rather than many of a few styles.

A COLLAR OF SELAGINELLAS.

Those who play to win will tell you that "the game's the thing," and, of course, the plant's the thing in an Easter arrangement. Still, the effectiveness and salability of an Easter basket of plants is largely the result of good taste in the selection of an appropriate receptacle for the particular plant to be used, with such a finishing touch as is given by the selaginellas in the tulip pans shown on this page. The small ferns used to finish off the baskets improved the appearance of the arrangements out of all proportion to the small cost of the stock used. The basket on the left of the illustration was finished in silver. It contained sixteen La Reine tulips, and, with the selaginellas planted around the edge to conceal the soil, the nakedness between the basket and the blooms was effectively done away with. The basket on the right contained twenty-four red tulips, the color combining effectively with the gold finish of the pot cover. Here, too, the selaginellas were just the touch to give an artistic finish.

Anyone can plant tulips in a pan, but there are no great number of the stores handling bulb pans at Easter that stop to cover the soil from sight. Some use green moss, which is a great deal better than nothing, but the small ferns are the best of all. It is to the plant arrangement what the lace collar is to milady's costume.

THE VARIEGATED PINEAPPLE.

Ananas sativus variegatus is an all-the-year-round plant, but it is an especially good Easter subject. The illustration on page 30 shows the variegated pineapple in a gold basket. The plant was removed from the pot in which it was grown and planted directly into the glass dish within the basket. The retailer who showed these in his Easter display last year sold his entire stock in short order, though he was wise enough to have not more than two of the plants on view at any one time; each one as sold was tagged in the customer's presence and set away for delivery, this retailer having found that it is much easier to sell a novelty when only a few are shown, creating the impression, without saying so, that not many customers will be fortunate enough to be supplied.

GERANIUMS AT EASTER.

If you never have tried it, it will surprise you how many people will buy geraniums at Easter. Of course, they do not want the plant in a red pot—they want small sizes carrying fair trusses of bloom planted in some small oddity in the way of a receptacle, such as are shown in the two illustrations on page 35. In one of these illustrations the receptacle was one of the small so-called Roman boxes, while the other was in a green glazed basket-shaped dish. In the latter case the receptacle represented $3 of the selling price and the geraniums $1.50, at which both turned the retailer a good profit.

Shown in the same illustrations are some small ericas in one of the white waterway affairs, and in the other are some crocuses in one of the green enameled tin receptacles, this one containing three of the little white square china jars that these latticework affairs are made to hold.

POPULAR PRICED PLANTS.

It was a good many years ago that the retailers catering to the high class trade in big cities began to offer combinations of flowering plants, arranged in baskets or hampers. At the start the tendency was toward large arrangements, containing a great variety of stock, and perhaps it was for this reason that the custom made little progress outside the larger cities—it was a number of years before the retailers in towns of 50,000 population or less began to offer plant arrangements, employing the accessories used in the large cities. For a long time the retailers in the provincial cities thought their trade did not care for the embellishment of plants; they said their people would not pay a price which would meet the cost of the accessories, let alone turning a profit on them. Now all this is changed. Within the last few years florists in the smaller cities, and even in the country towns, have found that an appropriate combination of plant and receptacle doubles salability; scarcely anyone will buy even a single pot of Easter lilies unless the pot is covered with crepe paper, if nothing more.

The tendency of late years has been away from the big combinations of plants; now the majority of plants offered for Easter sale are shown simply one variety planted in an appropriate receptacle. The illustrations on pages handling bulb pans at Easter that stop to cover the soil from sight. Some use green moss, which is a great deal better than nothing, but the small ferns are the best of all. It is to the plant arrangement what the lace collar is to milady's costume.

THE VARIEGATED PINEAPPLE.

Ananas sativus variegatus is an all the year round plant, but it is an especially good Easter subject. The illustration on page 30 shows the variegated pineapple in a gold basket. The plant was removed from the pot in which it was grown and planted directly into the glass dish within the basket. The retailer who showed these in his Easter display last year sold his entire stock in short order, though he was wise enough to have not more than two of the plants on view at any one time; each one as sold was tagged in the customer's presence and set away for delivery, this retailer having found that it is much easier to sell a novelty when only a few are shown, creating the impression, without saying so, that not many customers will be fortunate enough to be supplied.

GERANIUMS AT EASTER.

If you never have tried it, it will surprise you how many people will buy geraniums at Easter. Of course, they do not want the plant in a red pot; they want small sizes, carrying fan trusses of bloom planted in some small oddity in the way of a receptacle, such as are shown in the two illustrations on page 35. In one of these illustrations the receptacle was one of the small so called Roman boxes, while the other was in a green glazed basket-shaped dish. In the latter case the receptacle represented $3 of the selling price and the geraniums $1.50, at which both turned the retailer a good profit.

Shown in the same illustrations are some small ericas in one of the white waterway affairs, and in the other are some crocuses in one of the green enameled tin receptacles, this one containing three of the little white square china jars that these latticework affairs are made to hold.

POPULAR PRICED PLANTS.

It was a good many years ago that the retailers catering to the high class trade in big cities began to offer combinations of flowering plants, arranged in baskets or hampers. At the start the tendency was toward large arrangements, containing a great variety of stock, and perhaps it was for this reason that the custom made little progress outside the larger cities. It was a number of years before the retailers in towns of 50,000 population or less began to offer plant arrangements, employing the accessories used in the large cities. For a long time the retailers in the provincial cities thought their trade did not care for the embellishment of plants; they said their people would not pay a price which would meet the cost of the accessories, let alone turning a profit on them. Now all this is changed. Within the last few years florists in the smaller cities, and even in the country towns, have found that an appropriate combination of plant and receptacle doubles salability; scarcely anyone will buy even a single pot of Easter lilies unless the pot is covered with crepe paper, if nothing more.

The tendency of late years has been away from the big combinations of plants; now the majority of plants offered for Easter sale are shown simply one variety planted in an appropriate receptacle. The illustrations on pages 32 and 33 show such combinations of plant and plant receptacle. In one of these hyacinths are shown in a green, unglazed jar, the color being slightly darker than the color of the foliage. In another is a Dr. Encke azalea transferred from its pot into the inner receptacle of one of the delicate white china jardinières. In another, several primulas are shown in one of the gold baskets which have been so popular of late. This was an oval basket. Still another of the combinations shows a genista in a dumb-bell shaped receptacle of green, unglazed pottery, which attracted by its oddity as well as by the tastefulness of the combination. The yellow of the flower and the yellow of the ribbon rosette combined most harmoniously with the green of foliage and receptacle. All of these articles sold like hot cakes last Easter in a store the proprietor of which says frankly that though he caters to an exceedingly well-to-do trade, the bulk of his sales are on just such articles priced at from about $3 to $7.50.

GENISTA AND GOLD.

Gold has recently been having a phenomenal run with the supply houses; gold baskets have been used in some stores almost to the exclusion of everything else, though the average florist finds that it is better policy to buy a few pieces of a great many different styles than to stock up heavily with any one kind of plant receptacle. However, for some plants nothing is so well suited as the gold basket; for the genista it is the acme of appropriateness. The plant shown in the illustration on this page presents an especially harmo-

COST OF DELIVERY.

The Old Method and the New.

The retail florist in a large city has many trials and tribulations, as we all know. One of the difficulties to solve is the punctual delivery of our goods to widely separated sections of the city, perhaps on the same morning, at the least possible expense. Quite a few retail florists have turned to the motor car as a means of facilitating their deliveries, and in the issue of the Review for March 9 the writer compared the advantages of the auto and the horse, with all points seemingly in favor of the former.

Every phase was considered, excepting one—the relative cost. This, of course, is one of the most important points and should be carefully gone into before investing in an auto. The writer could conceive of no better way of getting at the facts than by taking up the matter with a number of florists using horses and autos in different cities. Consequently a list of questions was mailed to some fifteen retailers now using autos. The answers were incomplete; still I was able to make the following deductions:

The Horse.

First of all, let us consider the general method of delivery—the horse. As no two firms work under just the same conditions or follow the same rules for making deliveries, we will have to treat this matter in a general way. Some florists keep a number of wagons busy all day, while with others one horse can do all the work.

Three good horses will cost	450.00

Two drivers' wages at $10 per week	1,040.00
Interest on investment at 5%	56.50

One year's cost

Of course these figures may not fit any individual case, but they represent the average florist's expense in operating two one-horse wagons.

The Automobile.

To arrive at the cost of operating an automobile delivery car is a little more difficult than to figure the cost for a horse and wagon, for the reason that the cost of repairs depends largely upon the way the machine is handled and on the further fact that most florists' machines are new; the cost for up-keep may increase when the autos are older.

This is the way the autos average up with the retailers who gave me their figures:

THE AUTOMOBILE.

One year's cost

An auto can readily be heated from the heat of the muffler, thus effecting a saving of $25 per year.

There is no doubt that the cost of operating an auto or delivering with horses varies considerably under different conditions. These, of course, every man should know. One thing remains a fact: gasoline, lubricating oil, tires, repairs, etc., cost just about the same, be it in New York or some little town on the western coast. Autos are also the same price almost everywhere in the United States.

The above figures are as nearly correct as could be obtained, and no partiality was shown either method. They speak for themselves. The auto has solved, or will solve, the delivery problem to a large extent. It is the initial cost that deters many, but once used I think you will never go back to the horse. The proprietor of the business with which the writer is connected is an exceptionally conservative man and was skeptical about purchasing an auto for delivering. It is now nearly a year that it has been in use and it has proven a paying investment.

Of course, with a firm that requires only one wagon, the proportion of the cost would be somewhat different. In the first place, a less expensive machine could be purchased. Then the mileage would be cut in half, meaning a considerable reduction in operating expenses. Painting and overhauling of wagons and autos has not been taken into consideration, as both ous arrangement, the yellow flowers, the green foliage and the gold basket, the latter, of course, lined with tin, going together as though made particularly for the purpose. The effect was still further improved by the addition of the gold tie knotted on the handle of the basket.

In this comparison we will consider a firm requiring two one-horse wagons to handle the deliveries on ordinary days. Where two horses are used practically all day, three horses must be kept in order to give each one an occasional rest. Averaging the figures, we get the following investment and operating expense:

need the same treatment in this respect. Still, one auto will cost less for painting than two wagons.

With the above conclusions arrived at, what kind of a car should we purchase? In this matter I will endeavor to give a few pointers in a future issue.

SOME SIMPLE COLOR LAWS.

Colors, Tints and Shades.

In addition to the principle stated in the last chapter of this article, as to the opposite colors in the circle being harmonious in combination, as well as their dependent tints and shades, we are about to arrive at another important principle, which can be discussed after we obtain a clear understanding of the terms, tint and shade. A pure color is the normal tone. A tone is any grade of a named color. A tint is a light tone of any color. A shade is a dark tone.

Since any flower is composed of two or more colors, it is likely to run into tints and shades of all these colors. As we learned in the last chapter, the fact that one flower is composed of this system of colors makes its color plan a complex one to begin with. Then, when we come to combining these complex systems of color designing one with the other, unless we have color instincts we are going to be lost in the maze. It follows that putting two flowers of different colors together is no trifling matter.

The Allowable and the Admirable.

All these delicate color influences determine the niceties of fine harmony and make the differences between allowable and exquisite coloring. For example, many pink and lavender sweet peas make fair combinations, but, if you wish to strike a chord of perfect harmony, select a rich, dark violet and set it close to a light lavender pink, and this illustrates our next principle, as expressed in these words: The deeper shades of a normal color are best combined with the lightest tints of its own or a harmonious color.

This principle, namely, the common color strain which runs through all parts of a harmonious combination, is clearly discerned in the color scheme of any blooming plant, which invariably shows a tint or shade of one of its normal colors running through flower, bud, seed, foliage and stem. Take as an illustration a cineraria. A purple one will show a lavender tint under the leaves or on the stems. Sometimes it will be a reddish lavender; sometimes it will be a more decided blue lavender. In either case it is an excellent illustration of the fact that red and blue make purple. The general tone of the upper foliage will be that of a purple green, rather than a yellow green or any other green.

This law of color association refers not only to the combining of two or more colors in flowers, but also to the selection of extra green, the receptacles, the ribbon or any other accessory.

32 and 33 show such combinations of plant and plant receptacle. In one of these hyacinths are shown in a green, unglazed jar, the color being slightly darker than the color of the foliage. In another is a Dr. Eneke azalea transferred from its pot into the inner receptacle of one of the delicate white china jardineres. Thinking in Colors.

Practice in color combination is like drill in mental arithmetic. You can think in colors. A proposed combination can be tested out in your mind. You can also determine, by examination of a plant, whether such and such colors will combine well.

Many people, as they think they advance in taste, taboo combinations. Not so the observant student. He sees before him nature always mixing, blending, producing harmony in contrasts. You see a broad expanse of summer sky, touched by a white fleece in a far-away point and cut into by the browns, the greens and the grays of the distant horizon, not to mention the reds and the yellows of the foreground.

He must learn, then, to analyze as well as to combine, to observe as well as formulate, to enjoy as well as manufacture.

Every day, as education advances, customers become more critical and observant. In the long run, he who is in advance in the matter of taste will not only be the greater factor in educating his clientage, but will be the gainer financially. The discriminating trade will swing toward him.

THE COUNTERLESS STORE.

The modern high class flower store contains no counters. It is impossible to make an artistic display of stock in a store arranged like the typical dry goods establishment, with an aisle down the center, counters and wall cases. Especially at such a time as Easter it becomes desirable to have the extra space provided by the removal of counters. Most Easter plants can be shown standing on the floor and plant stands are available where improved effect is to be had by elevation.

The illustration of the flower store sans counters came to The Review just after Easter last year. There was no mark about it, not even a postmark, to indicate what store it is, or where. But it serves as an excellent example of the arrangement now adopted by the retailers who cater to the better class of trade. There is an atmosphere about a store so furnished and stocked that speaks for the character of the service given. It appears that here salesmen and customers meet on an equal footing and that their relations are likely to be so pleasant that one as well as the other will wish to renew them at an early date.

EASTER PREPAREDNESS.

In Greenhouse and Store.

Flora's greatest festival is now near at hand. Easter has no such evidence of antiquity as Christmas—that it existed as a festival among heathen tribes or nations, nor can you summon such an array of folk lore to embellish it. Yet there is good evidence that it was an important event ages before the sacred events occurred with which Christianity connects it.

Enough for the historical. From what I can hear, lilies seem to be plentiful for Easter; also they are of pretty good quality. Do not move a lily from a warm house to one 15 or 20 degrees cooler unless the buds are white and are ready to burst open. After that they will expand in almost any temperature.

Of late we have had many days of bright sunshine, which has tended to upset our calculations, especially on bulbous stock. Shading to keep off the direct rays of the sun will help greatly.

As yet rhododendrons show little signs of opening their buds, but when they finally do start to open the plant is shortly full of bloom. The great majority of azaleas will be early. A good way to retard them is to set them under a high bench and cover with tissue paper.

We are all crowded just now, and we must maneuver. Think what is of most value to you, and some things not so important must give place to those that are paramount.

Do not expect all the buds on the hybrid perpetuals to be out at once. It is not the way of a rose, and your customer will be more pleased if a few flowers are expanded and a few buds are to come. I have found there is a growing preference among the people for a plant with some buds yet to come.

Selling and Delivery.

Of course you have all had advice about being prepared for the Easter rush, for it is sure to come, no matter what the weather is. I do not propose to go into detail now, because any hints I could give would be a repetition of the old story. Be in a perfect state of preparedness and put nothing off. Provide yourself with plenty of efficient help. Other trades take on a lot of extra help at the rush time, and if it is not as efficient as your steady help, no harm can come of it, for your customers, seeing the place full and a rush of business, will not expect the same treatment they would get in ordinary days.

The Modern Flower Store is Counterless.

Crocuses and Scillas in Appropriate Receptacles are Fine Sellers.

The trimming or decorating of all plants sent out nowadays has grown to be a great feature of the business. You must keep to the front in this, as well as in other features. The smallest plant is never sent out or handed to a customer unless the pot is enveloped with green paper tied with ribbon to match. As the article rises in value the decoration becomes more elaborate, and if you do what you ought you will charge enough to cover the cost. Many a plant of poor appearance or imperfect form is sold through the judicious use of accessories.

The retailer who has only a limited area of a city store is terribly congested at Easter, and the man who has a conservatory at his back, or a range of glass in connection, is to be congratulated.

Division of labor is a great thing. It does not take a great schooling to teach a young man to trim a plant tastefully, and the most handy at that may be a poor salesman. Good salesmen should not be expected to do the work that much cheaper help can do as well.

One of the most trying things connected with these busy times is the delivery. At least eighty-five per cent of our sales have to be delivered. It is money made, and made quickly, to have a man who understands the city and is able to map out the trips in their successive order. Give particular attention to this end of the business.

THE USE OF LEAF-MOLD.

I should like to know whether leaf-mold is good for carnations and geraniums, as I have a chance to get as much as 1,000 loads right from the woods. If well rotted, would this make a good soil for greenhouses? If you have had any experience with this kind of soil, I should like to know all about it.

C. W. C.

Leaf-mold is a most excellent potting medium for many varieties of plants, but it is too light to be of any value for carnations and geraniums. While they will grow fairly well in soil containing a proportion of leaf-mold, they succeed much better in loam. However, for sowing seeds of nearly all kinds a large proportion of leaf-mold, with some sand to give it porosity, is the best compost procurable. There are also many plants, such as Lorraine begonias, ferns of many varieties, many foliage plants and quite a few bedding plants in the earlier stages, which grow better in a compost containing plenty of leaf-mold than in anything else. By all means secure a quantity of the leaf-mold. You will find it invaluable for many purposes; in fact, no florist is properly equipped without a supply of rotted leaves. For mixing in soil for benches it is not equal to well decayed manure, but if you have a naturally stiff, retentive loam, a little may advantageously be added.

C. W.

GROWING FERNS FROM SPORES.

Please give us a brief description of the process of growing small ferns from spores.

G. S. C.

Having the spores ready for sowing, the first step is to prepare some pots in which to sow them. Take a sufficient number of clean 6-inch pots—new pots are best for the purpose—and fill them two-thirds full of drainage material; either broken pots or clean cinders will do. Then fill up with fine soil to within half an inch of the top, pressing down the soil smoothly and firmly. The best soil is a peaty mixture containing a fair proportion of sand, but no manure. In order to kill weed seeds and fungi, the soil should be sterilized. Give the soil in the pots a good watering and allow it to drain for an hour or two before sowing.

The spores should be sown thinly on the surface of the soil, and the pots should then be plunged in sand or ashes in a propagating frame, in order to retain the moisture. If no frame is available in the propagating house, cover the pots with panes of glass and protect from the sun. The object of this is to conserve the moisture, so that no watering will be needed before the spores germinate.

As soon as the seedlings show signs of making a leaf—or, rather, when the first growth or prothallus reaches full size—the seedlings may be pricked out in small clumps into other pots or into flats, in which they may remain until large enough to pot off. The seedlings require shade during all the early stages of their growth, with a night temperature of 60 to 65 degrees, and should always be kept moist.

Do not move a lily from a warm house to one 15 or 20 degrees cooler unless the buds are white and are ready to burst open. After that they will expand in almost any temperature.

Of late we have had many days of bright sunshine, which has tended to upset our calculations, especially on bulbous stock. Shading to keep off the direct rays of the sun will help greatly.

As yet rhododendrons show little signs of opening their buds, but when they finally do start to open the plant is shortly full of bloom. The great majority of azaleas will be early. A good way to retard them is to set them under a high bench and cover with tissue paper.

We are all crowded just now, and we must maneuver. Think what is of most value to you, and some things not so important must give place to those that are paramount.

Do not expect all the buds on the hybrid perpetuals to be out at once. It is not the way of a rose, and your customer will be more pleased if a few flowers are expanded and a few buds are to come. I have found there is a growing preference among the people for a plant with some buds yet to come.

Selling and Delivery.

Of course you have all had advice about being prepared for the Easter rush, for it is sure to come, no matter what the weather is. I do not propose to go into detail now, because any hints I could give would be a repetition of the old story. Be in a perfect state of preparedness and put nothing off. Provide yourself with plenty of efficient help. Other trades take on a lot of extra help at the rush time, and if it is not as efficient as your steady help, no harm can come of it, for your customers, seeing the place full and a rush of business, will not expect the same treatment they would get in ordinary days.

The trimming or decorating of all plants sent out nowadays has grown to be a great feature of the business. You must keep to the front in this, as well as in other features. The smallest plant is never sent out or handed to a customer unless the pot is enveloped with green paper tied with ribbon to match. As the article rises in value the decoration becomes more elaborate, and if you do what you ought you will charge enough to cover the cost. Many a plant of poor appearance or imperfect form is sold through the judicious use of accessories.

The retailer who has only a limited area of a city store is terribly congested at Easter, and the man who has a conservatory at his back, or a range of glass in connection, is to be congratulated.

Division of labor is a great thing. It does not take a great schooling to teach a young man to trim a plant tastefully, and the most handy at that may be a poor salesman. Good salesmen should not be expected to do the work that much cheaper help can do as well.

One of the most trying things connected with these busy times is the delivery. At least eighty-five per cent of our sales have to be delivered. It is money made, and made quickly, to have a man who understands the city and is able to map out the trips in their successive order. Give particular attention to this end of the business.

THE USE OF LEAF-MOLD.

I should like to know whether leaf mold is good for carnations and geraniums, as I have a chance to get as much as 1,000 loads right from the woods. If well rotted, would this make a good soil for greenhouses? If you have had any experience with this kind of soil, I should like to know all about it.

C. W. C.

Leaf mold is a most excellent potting medium for many varieties of plants, but it is too light to be of any value for carnations and geraniums. While they will grow fairly well in soil containing a proportion of leaf mold, they succeed much better in loam. However, for sowing seeds of nearly all kinds a large proportion of leaf-mold, with some sand to give it porosity, is the best compost procurable. There are also many plants, such as Lorraine begonias, ferns of many varieties, many foliage plants and quite a few bedding plants in the earlier stages, which grow better in a compost containing plenty of leaf mold than in anything else. By all means secure a quantity of the leaf mold. You will find it invaluable for many purposes; in fact, no florist is properly equipped without a supply of rotted leaves. For mixing in soil for benches it is not equal to well decayed manure, but if you have a naturally stiff, retentive loam, a little may advantageously be added.

C. W.

GROWING FERNS FROM SPORES.

Please give us a brief description of the process of growing small ferns from spores.

G. S. C.

Having the spores ready for sowing, the first step is to prepare some pots in which to sow them. Take a sufficient number of clean 6 inch pots—new pots are best for the purpose—and fill them two thirds full of drainage material; either broken pots or clean cinders will do. Then fill up with fine soil to within half an inch of the top, pressing down the soil smoothly and firmly. The best soil is a peaty mixture containing a fair proportion of sand, but no manure. In order to kill weed seeds and fungi, the soil should be sterilized. Give the soil in the pots a good watering and allow it to drain for an hour or two before sowing.

The spores should be sown thinly on the surface of the soil, and the pots should then be plunged in sand or ashes in a propagating frame, in order to retain the moisture. If no frame is available in the propagating house, cover the pots with panes of glass and protect from the sun. The object of this is to conserve the moisture, so that no watering will be needed before the spores germinate.

As soon as the seedlings show signs of making a leaf—or, rather, when the first growth or prothallus reaches full size—the seedlings may be pricked out in small clumps into other pots or into flats, in which they may remain until large enough to pot off. The seedlings require shade during all the early stages of their growth, with a night temperature of 60 to 65 degrees, and should always be kept moist.

PRUNING HARDY ROSES.

Make Haste Somewhat Slowly.

There is no advantage in early pruning of hardy roses, as the plants are likely to break away and late spring frosts will seriously cripple such growths. Early in April is sufficiently early to prune in the colder states, and in the more northerly latitudes the end of April is better. When the winter protection has been removed, it can be readily seen how much fresh green wood we have left to prune back to, and it is always possible that after the removal of mother earth, or whatever other covering we may have used, some of the newly exposed wood will die back; therefore, wait a few days after uncovering before pruning. In the case of hybrid perpetuals, hard pruning gives by far the best results. Entirely cut out all dead, dying and weak wood. Prune the strongest shoots back to three or four buds and only moderately strong shoots to two buds. You are then fairly sure to have strong growths and fine flowers, other conditions, of course, being congenial. Another advantage of hard pruning is that winter protection is so much easier applied; with light pruning it is quite otherwise.

The Hybrid Teas.

The hybrid teas, where they have been laid over and covered with earth, should now be uncovered. Those which were lifted and either buried outdoors or planted in coldframes, should be planted as soon as possible. Keep the grafts well below the surface of the ground. Do not let the roots become dry, and tramp the ground firmly about them. These and the teas want much lighter pruning than the hybrid perpetuals. Cut out dead wood and only remove the ends of the live wood. One-third the previous season's growth is sufficient to cut away. While the hybrid perpetuals do their best in stiff, heavy soil, the hybrid teas are more at home in lighter soil; even such as is of quite a sandy nature will prove all right if liberally manured, and if a mulch of manure and occasional waterings are given in summer.

The Ramblers.

The ramblers want little pruning. Dead and weak wood should be entirely removed and the end of the long, strong last year's growths cut back a little. If they can be bent before tying in, they will break stronger and more evenly. Many growers of ramblers spoil their plants by leaving on all the old flowering wood. This causes the plants to send up few or no suckers from the base, and growers wonder why their plants flower so poorly as compared with those of their neighbors, who cut out the old flowering wood clean, thus giving a chance for strong suckers to come up, and it is these which we can depend upon to produce big, handsome trusses.

There is now a wonderful wealth of material available in the way of ramblers and one almost wonders how we managed to get along without them a few years ago. Tausendschon and American Pillar are two beautiful new sorts which have come through the last winter unscathed. It is no longer necessary to plant, or rather overplant, Crimson Rambler; fine though it is, the many fine pink sorts are just as reliable and few are more beautiful after the flowering season has passed. Crimson Rambler's poor foliage is its great drawback, while such sorts as Hiawatha, Lady Gay, Dorothy Perkins and many others all have beautiful shiny foliage, which they hold until the end of the season.

A Word on Planting.

Roses cannot be planted too early, after frost has left the ground. Do not prune them back hard at planting time. Leave that undone for at least three weeks. In planting roses avoid such stock as has been carried over winter in storage sheds, packed in sand. These plants may look beautiful and green on arrival, but an exposure to sun and wind will speedily give many of them a black, as well as shriveled appearance. Plants dug from the open ground, or which have been heeled in outdoors during winter, will give far the most satisfactory results. In the warmer states many growers have good success with roses on their own roots. Grafted or budded stock is, however, hardier and more adaptable for the cold states, also possessing greater vigor.

GERMINATION OF SEEDS.

Please let me know how long seeds of hybrid teas require to germinate. I gathered some early this year and should like to try them. The seeds are from Gruss an Teplitz. G. G.

The hips, as soon as ripe, should be placed in moist sand to stratify. When the fruit portion is well rotted, take out the seeds, wash and dry them well and sow at once. The earlier they are picked and sown, if ripe, the earlier will they usually germinate. When sown in fall, if placed in flats, they will generally appear in late spring, but if they do not show then, exercise a little patience, as it may be fall or even another spring before they germinate. SUCCESS IN ROOTING CUTTINGS.

What per cent of carnation cuttings do most growers succeed in rooting, particularly in the Enchantress varieties and Lady Bountiful? _____ E. F. & S.

Of the Enchantress varieties you should have no trouble in rooting from ninety to 100 per cent. Lady Bountiful is not quite so easy, but with good cuttings and under favorable weather conditions you ought not to lose more than ten to twenty per cent. This is, of course, taking for granted that you have proper facilities for giving the cuttings the best of care. If you do not have perfect control over the heating and ventilating you can not hope to get good strikes.

gladioli will be worth more money at Memorial day than the white ones. The latter will sell well for June weddings.

Lilium Speciosum.

Lilium speciosum bulbs potted in November or December, if kept in a greenhouse, will now be a foot or more in height. It is poor policy to allow them to stand along the sides of the paths, or even below the benches, until drawn up and weakly. Give them a light, sunny bench in a moderately cool house. They rather resent forcing and there would be no special advantage in forcing them until they are wanted during June, but as at this season other flowers are so abundant, it is really better to hold them back for July and August use. If the pots have been in cold, unheated pits or cellars, the growths will still be short. Stand them well up to the light. Any temperature above actual freezing will suit them nicely.

Flowering Shrubs for Easter.

Deciduous flowering shrubs should be in nice flower a few days before Easter, so that they can be placed in a cool house to harden them. If taken direct from the temperature of a forcing house and exposed to a little of the cold winds, which are common even in supposedly balmy April, they will soon present a sorry appearance. The cooler these are opened, the better satisfaction will they give to storekeepers and other customers. It does not take long to force some of these shrubs into flower; especially is this true of prunus, cerasus, forsythias and some of the shrubby spiræas, like Thunbergii. A rather longer period is needed for lilacs, deutzias, crataegus and Azalea mollis.

SEASONABLESUGGESTIONS*Dutch Bulbs for Easter.

It was at one time feared that the late date of Easter would make it difficult, if not impossible, to hold back bulbous plants for Easter. The cold weather has, however, materially aided in retarding and anyone possessing a good cold cellar will have no special trouble in having hyacinths, tulips and narcissi in good shape. Give the plants a coldframe. Shade the tulips when opening during sunshine. If perchance any seem a little late, place them in heat for a day or two, but a warm spell for a couple of days in April sends bulbs along with a grand rush. The cooler and airier they can be grown, the better they will sell, as the dwarf, stocky pans are what people like. Any plants in flower will hold a number of days fresh on the floor of a cool cellar.

Irises and Gladioli.

Flats containing the small-flowered gladioli and Spanish irises should go in a temperature of 50 degrees now in order to insure their being in flower for Memorial day. These bulbous flowers are invaluable for making up with bouquets and anyone having a large batch will have no trouble in selling them. They want quite a lot of water and, with the flats full of active roots, an application of liquid manure once in three or four days will prove beneficial. The colored varieties of irises and Forcing Out the Easter Flowers.

But little more than a week remains between now and Easter. The spring, while moderately clear, has been cold and plants have not advanced nearly so rapidly as during the same period a year ago. No matter how clear the skies are, if there is an average temperature 5 to 10 degrees lower during the day, and cold nights, flowers will not develop on the lilies as with warmer weather. If the buds are not now showing white, they are late and want all the heat you can give them. It is worth a little extra effort to try to have at least one flower open on a plant, as after Easter prices are always away down. Give any late plants the warmest house you have; 75 degrees at night is too high for the majority of plants, but for laggard lilies it is now a necessity. Spray them freely and bottle up plenty of sun heat in the afternoon and if they can be flowered on time, heat and moisture, with old Sol's aid, will accomplish it. Often we get spells of dark, cold weather near Easter and such weather is distressing to those whose plants are late. All we can do under such conditions is to use plenty of fire heat and moisture.

Making Up Easter Lilies.

There is always a considerable sale for large pots or pans of Easter lilies. These should be made up before the plants have too many flowers expanded, as there is then less probability of their being bruised. Ten-inch pots with five stalks are often asked for and are effective in churches. It is not necessary to retain all soil about the plants when making them up. Tearing part of it away will not hurt them or arrest the development of the flowers in the least. Soak well with water after making up the pots and do not expose these plants to bright sunshine, which might cause some of the lower foliage to take on a golden hue. It may be asked, why not use these large pots for the bulbs when they are first potted? The objections are, first, that the bulbs do not make root so well in pots containing a large body of earth, and second, in a batch of lilies it would be something of a novelty to find any four or five bulbs which, if put in the same pot, would flower simultaneously. Keep the pollen masses removed from the flowers and, of course, make a point of seeing that any stems which need supports get them and that all pots are scrupulously clean. Plants in flower should have a cold house, pit or cellar; 40 degrees at night in a cellar will hold them in good shape, but even with lilies do not take them direct from 70 to 75 degrees at night to so low a temperature.

Lilies for Memorial Day.

It is not a long cry from Easter to Memorial day this year, only some six weeks. Possibly if Easter were made to occur on a given day (April 14 is the date selected in England), it would be in many ways an advantage, as these early and late Easters are harassing to the growers of Easter stock. The British Parliament is to consider the recommendations to have Christmas day always come on Monday and Easter day on a stated day, and it is possible that in a few years these movable feasts will be changed. But to hark back to Memorial day, quite a few lilies are always grown for that holiday, and everything in the flower line sells at that time. It will be possible to give these late lilies a little better bench space, with Easter stock out of the way. They should have their buds peeping by the end of April and they will be all right. If you have only Easter lilies just showing buds, it is better to let them come on naturally, as funeral and other work always calls for a certain number. Any with buds just peeping at Easter can easily be held back for Memorial day in a cool house.

LILIES TURNING YELLOW.

Please advise me what to do in regard to my giganteum lilies, as they are turning yellow from the bottom up. They were planted October 29, 1910, in 6-inch pots, and I put them in a dark cellar with a temperature of 46 degrees. I watered them about every two weeks, and when they were about one inch above the ground I put them in a greenhouse with a night temperature of 65 degrees. Having no steam heat, I put a large stove in the center of the house. My lilies are now about eight to eighteen inches high. When the pots were well filled with roots I watered them every day, using a hose. There are some worms in the soil, which I think have something to do with the lilies turning yellow. What is the best manure? I have not tried any as yet.

F. W. L.

Starvation at the roots or an inadequate water supply may be the cause of your lilies turning yellow. Any worms in the soil will not do a great amount of harm. You can easily get rid of them by giving the plants some lime water. Your treatment of the giganteums seems to have been about right. Spray them quite freely overhead and remember that now, when the pots are full of roots, not one, but two and perhaps three waterings a day may be necessary during clear weather. Sheep manure water is good; so is that obtained from cows. If your plants look starved, water with weak nitrate of soda water—a teaspoonful to a 12-quart can at intervals of five or six days. Two waterings should suffice, but animal liquid manure twice a week will be found helpful. The earliest buds on your lilies should be showing white early in April. If they do not, you are late and must give the plants all possible heat and moisture.

TULIPS NOT FLOWERING.

Last fall I planted a number of tulip bulbs in boxes. I kept them buried outdoors until the first part of December and then put them in a cellar. I brought them to the light from January on, as I needed them. I planted Keizerskroon, Cottage Maid and other varieties, which flowered nicely. I also planted a number of Chrysolora, yellow, but not a bulb flowered. They were planted in boxes with other varieties, which flowered nicely, but the yellow grew long and spindly, and then withered. Do you think the bulbs were at fault? They were apparently as good as those which bloomed. The mystery to me is that they should fail to mature, being planted in the same boxes and given the same treatment as those which bloomed satisfactorily.

A Pot of Good Lilies.

The Crocus and the Geranium each is a Quick Seller at Easter.

W. B. S.

Chrysolora tulips are not a good forcing variety, although splendid as a bedder outdoors. Too early forcing of a sort which is not naturally adapted for this purpose may have caused the buds to become brown. There are other possible causes, such as premature digging of the bulbs in Holland. Last year was not a bad one for ripening bulbs, but some growers, in order to have their stock cured and ready for export early, may have lifted them sooner than was advisable. A deficiency of water at the roots will cause buds to turn brown. The surface soil may appear moist, but when the flats are full of roots they require a lot of water. Another season, if instead of planting Chrysolora, you will use Yellow Prince, a fine golden yellow and sweet-scented tulip, you will have better success.

SNAPDRAGONS FOR NOVEMBER.

Can I have snapdragons in bloom about November 15? Will you please give me some information as to when they should be planted and when I should stop pinching them? H. E. Y.

In order to have snapdragons in flower about November 15, your plants must be benched from the middle to the end of August. Seed to produce these plants should be sown about the middle of June. Pot these off into 2½-inch pots and later into 4-inch pots. Pinch once, first allowing the flower stems to run up somewhat, as they then break stronger. If you want fancy spikes, leave three to five to a plant. If small or medium ones will do, six to eight can be left to each. You can also secure young plants from cuttings, which, if taken in early June, rooted in a cold-frame and grown along, will make nice plants to bench in August. Be sure not to allow them to become potbound. You will not get nearly as fine spikes on your plants in November and December as in the spring months.

C. W.

RAMBLERS NOT BLOOMING.

I have several Crimson Rambler roses which do not bloom. I should like to know what the trouble is. They have not bloomed since I received them.

E. B.

Perhaps you have left all the old flowering wood on your plants. They should be cut out each season after the flowers are gone. You will thus get strong shoots to start from the base, and it is on these that the finest trusses are always produced. Feed the plants well, as all the ramblers like liberal treatment while growing.

Plants in flower should have a cold house, pit or cellar; 40 degrees at night in a cellar will hold them in good shape, but even with lilies do not take them direct from 70 to 75 degrees at night to so low a temperature.

Lilies for Memorial Day.

It is not a long cry from Easter to Memorial day this year, only some six weeks. Possibly if Easter were made to occur on a given day, April 11 is the earliest date for Memorial day, it would be in many ways an advantage, as these early and late Easters are harassing to the growers of Easter stock. The British Parliament is to consider the recommendations to have Christmas day always come on Monday and Easter day on a stated day, and it is possible that in a few years these movable feasts will be changed. But to hark back to Memorial day, quite a few lilies are always grown for that holiday, and everything in the flower line sells at that time. It will be possible to give these late lilies a little better bench space, with Easter stock out of the way. They should have their buds peeping by the end of April and they will be all right. If you have only Easter lilies just showing buds, it is better to let them come on naturally, as funeral and other work always calls for a certain number. Any with buds just peeping at Easter can easily be held back for Memorial day in a cool house.

LILIES TURNING YELLOW.

Please advise me what to do in regard to my giganteum lilies, as they are turning yellow from the bottom up. They were planted October 29, 1910, in 6 inch pots, and I put them in a dark cellar with a temperature of 46 degrees. I watered them about every two weeks, and when they were about one inch above the ground I put them in a greenhouse with a night temperature of 65 degrees. Having no steam heat, I put a large stove in the center of the house. My lilies are now about eight to eighteen inches high. When the pots were well filled with roots I watered them every day, using a hose. There are some worms in the soil, which I think have something to do with the lilies turning yellow. What is the best manure? I have not tried any as yet. F. W. L.

Starvation at the roots or an inadequate water supply may be the cause of your lilies turning yellow. Any worms in the soil will not do a great amount of harm. You can easily get rid of them by giving the plants some lime water. Your treatment of the giganteums seems to have been about right. Spray them quite freely overhead and remember that now, when the pots are full of roots, not one, but two and perhaps three waterings a day may be necessary during clear weather. Sheep manure water is good; so is that obtained from cows. If your plants look starved, water with weak nitrate of soda water—a teaspoonful to a 12 quart can at intervals of five or six days. Two waterings should suffice, but animal liquid manure twice a week will be found helpful. The earliest buds on your lilies should be showing white early in April. If they do not, you are late and must give the plants all possible heat and moisture. C. W.

TULIPS NOT FLOWERING.

Last fall I planted a number of tulip bulbs in boxes. I kept them buried out doors until the first part of December and then put them in a cellar. I brought them to the light from January on, as I needed them. I planted Keizerskroon, Cottage Maid and other varieties, which flowered nicely. I also planted a number of Chrysolora, yellow, but not a bulb flowered. They were planted in boxes with other varieties, which flowered nicely, but the yellow grew long and scindly, and then withered. Do you think the bulbs were at fault? They were apparently as good as those which bloomed. The mystery to me is that they should fail to mature, being planted in the same boxes and given the same treatment as those which bloomed satisfactorily. W. B. S.

A Pot of Good Lilies.

Chrysolora tulips are not a good forcing variety, although splendid as a bedder outdoors. Too early forcing of a sort which is not naturally adapted for this purpose may have caused the buds to become brown. There are other possible causes, such as premature digging of the bulbs in Holland. Last year was not a bad one for ripening bulbs, but some growers, in order to have their stock cured and ready for export early, may have lifted them sooner than was advisable. A deficiency of water at the roots will cause buds to turn brown. The surface soil may appear moist, but when the flats are full of roots they require a lot of water. Another season, if instead of planting Chrysolora, you will use Yellow Prince, a fine golden yellow and sweet-scented tulip, you will have better success. C. W.

SNAPDRAGONS FOR NOVEMBER.

Can I have snapdragons in bloom about November 15? Will you please give me some information as to when they should be planted and when I should stop pinching them? H. E. Y.

In order to have snapdragons in flower about November 15, your plants must be benched from the middle to the end of August. Seed to produce these plants should be sown about the middle of June. Pot these off into 2½ inch pots and later into 4 inch pots. Pinch once, first allowing the flower stems to run up somewhat, as they then break stronger. If you want fancy spikes, leave three to five to a plant. If small or medium ones will do, six to eight can be left to each. You can also secure young plants from cuttings, which, if taken in early June, rooted in a cold frame and grown along, will make nice plants to bench in August. Be sure not to allow them to become potbound. You will not get nearly as fine spikes on your plants in November and December as in the spring months. C. W.

RAMBLERS NOT BLOOMING.

I have several Crimson Rambler roses which do not bloom. I should like to know what the trouble is. They have not bloomed since I received them. E. B.

Perhaps you have left all the old flowering wood on your plants. They should be cut out each season after the flowers are gone. You will thus get strong shoots to start from the base, and it is on these that the finest trusses are always produced. Feed the plants well, as all the ramblers like liberal treatment while growing. THE NATIONAL FLOWER SHOW

A COMPLETE SUCCESS.

Now a Triennial Affair.

The great S. A. F. National Show, scheduled to run from March 25 to April 1, did not finally close its doors until Sunday night, April 2. Demands were so strong for an additional Sunday that the management yielded to the pressure to keep open and the crowd on the closing day seemed even larger than ever. The exhibition closed in a blaze of glory and many were the regrets expressed that it could not have run another week. There have never previously been exhibitions running so long as this in Boston and there were serious misgivings that the attendance, while splendid during the earlier days, might dwindle towards the close, but there was so much to see and so many new attractions were added day by day that people came, admired and wondered, and came again with their friends, and had it been possible to maintain exhibits in presentable condition for even another week there is little question but that it would have paid well.

It was announced Saturday, April 1, that with gate receipts of some $15,000 up to that time the show was a financial success, that guarantors would be paid back in full and that there would undoubtedly be a fair profit. This surpassed the most sanguine expectations of the management. It was decided March 30 by the board of directors of the S. A. F. to have the national show triennially, and now that Boston has shown that it can manage one of this size and make it a financial success, we may fairly expect a chorus of claimants for the 1914 show.

Weather Favors the Show.

The weather proved a trump card, as while it remained cold during the entire exhibition, this favored the exhibits and the attendance. With the ground frozen at the end of March and sleighing in progress in Maine, Vermont and Canada, many made the Boston trip who would not have come had spring started early, as it did a year ago.

Many exhibits remained fresh to the end, but the ten days' show was too much for some. Orchids, except cypripediums, went to sleep after a few days. Bulbous plants were quite passé at the close. On the other hand, azaleas, ericas, acacias and other hard-wooded plants kept finely. It was noted that specimens of box lately imported from Holland lost their leaves in showers, while those that were acclimated did not suffer in the least. The foliage on the rambler roses had mostly turned golden, but there were so many changes made each day that nothing unsightly met the visitors' eyes. James Wheeler, as superintendent of the exhibition, was ever on the alert and every day pleasing changes were made.

The appearance of some plants in the main hall a few days after the opening suggested that escaping gas or creosote was causing some damage. The real cause was there undoubtedly in some gaseous form, although it was not located. Everything being considered, however, things kept well and it is doubtful if they would have lasted better in any other hall in Boston.

Attendance at Meetings Slim.

A meeting of so many national societies brought an attendance unparalleled in the history of American floriculture. A show of the magnitude of this one has demonstrated one thing, viz.: that no matter how diverse and interesting a series of business sessions the several societies may map out in advance, the attractions of the exhibition are so potent that it is a difficult matter to get even a quorum together to talk business. Practically all the business sessions showed this. Some were abandoned and others materially modified to meet the conditions of the case.

The closing meeting of the S. A. F., scheduled for 9 a. m. April 1, was not called to order until 12:30. The exhibition hall was packed with visitors, but it was difficult to secure a quorum of members to hold the last session. President Asmus read a short address, congratulating the members on the magnificent success of the show and thanking all workers for their untiring efforts. He said that his address proper would be reserved for Baltimore, as would other addresses. He appointed as a committee on final resolutions A. T. De La Mare, J. H. Pepper, A. Farenwald, James Forbes and J. R. Fotheringham. The resolutions, which were adopted by acclamation, thanked the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, the local ladies' committee, F. R. Pierson, the chairman of the National Show committee, and all who had worked and helped to make the show such a success.

A telegram was read from Edwin Lonsdale, state vice-president in California, conveying congratulations to the society for its courage in holding a spring show and convention and stating that San Francisco would be the strategic point for a show in 1915.

James Forbes.

The Sweet Pea Section of the National Flower Show, Boston, March 28, 1911.

Presentation to Thomas Roland.

President Asmus rose and stated he had one more pleasant duty to perform. He spoke of Thomas Roland's hard work for the National Show and the wonderful exhibits he had made. He also referred to the fact that he became the proud father of a little daughter during the show and on behalf of a number of friends presented him with a beautiful solid silver baby's set of dishes, spoons, etc. Mr. Roland, who seemed completely nonplussed for a time, feelingly and appropriately replied. He said two things had especially pleased him: One was the advent of a little girl to his household; the other was the way everyone had worked for the big show and helped to make it such a success. He was enthusiastically applauded on taking his seat.

FARTHEST AFIELD.

Of all the many hundreds of trade visitors at the second National Flower Show whose names appeared in the long list published in last week's issue of The Review, that one farthest from home was James Forbes, of Portland, Ore. Mr. Forbes traveled clear across the continent to see the great Boston exhibition and says he was well repaid for his effort. He is a member of Martin & Forbes Co., a firm of florists widely known on the coast. He served most efficiently on the board of judges at Boston.

SOCIETY DAY AWARDS.

Society and rose day, with the price of admission doubled, did not in the least detract from the attendance March 31, and it added materially to the gate. There was a truly magnificent showing of cut flowers arranged for effect, and of work by some of the progressive retailers. On the whole this was the most successful day of the show. The awards were:

Display of roses covering 200 square feet, A. N. Pierson, Cromwell, Conn., first; A. Farenwald, Roslyn, Pa., second; W. H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass., third.

Exhibit of carnations covering 50 to 100 square feet, Peirce Bros., Waltham, first; S. J. Goddard, Framingham, second; Patten & Co., Tewksbury, third; Halifax Garden Co., Halifax, fourth.

Mantel decoration of carnations, Boston Cut Flower Co., Boston, first; Edward MacMulkin, Boston, second; Edward MacMulkin, third.

Table decoration, S. Hoffman, Boston, first; Edward MacMulkin, second.

Floral design, S. Hoffman, first.

One hundred cut roses arranged for effect, S. Hoffman, first; Edward MacMulkin, second. Basket of carnations, Julius Zinn, Boston, first; J. J. Casey, Boston, second; Penn The Florist, third.

GARDENERS' ASSOCIATION.

The National Association of Gardeners held its annual convention at Boston March 29, presided over by William Kleinheinz. The following officers were elected: President, Thomas Logan, Jenkintown, Pa.; first vice-president, T. J. Kempton, New York, N. Y.; second vice-president, R. H. Caverly, Lowell, Mass.; secretary, Basil Noyce, Brookline, Mass.; treasurer, Robert Bottomly, New Caanan, Conn.

After the business meeting a banquet was held, for 150 members and guests, at which the principal speakers were Robert Craig and F. R. Pierson.

MASSACHUSETTS MEDALS.

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society provided a number of its medals for award to the exhibitors at the National Flower Show and also furnished its own judges to place them independently of any awards by the show judges. The committee on awards consisted of T. D. Hatfield, A. H. Fewkes, Wilfrid Wheeler, Joseph Clark and Peter Fisher. The awards were:

Gold medal to W. A. Manda for display of palms, tree ferns and other tropical plants.

Gold medal to Thomas Roland for group of acacias and other plants.

Gold medal to R. & J. Farquhar & Co. for Dutch garden. (The award for this was at first only a silver medal, but was changed to a gold medal April 1.)

Silver medal to M. H. Walsh for collection of rambler roses.

Silver medal to Mrs. Frederick Ayer, George Page, gardener, for collection of hard-wooded plants.

Silver medal to Clement Newbold, Germantown, Pa., for specimen azaleas.

Silver medal to Sidney Hoffman for old-fashioned garden.

High commendation to Walte's Interlocking Steel Co., Newburgh, N. Y., for exhibit of steel bench frames, etc.

By way of explanation it may be said that a large number of other meritorious exhibits were given S. A. F. certificates and other awards at preceding August conventions, and therefore could not be considered by this committee.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

At the closing session of the annual convention of the American Carnation Society, Secretary Baur presented the report of the joint committee of the Carnation and Rose Societies in the matter of the 1912 meeting. The committee, composed of the two boards of directors, voted 7 to 2 to recommend that the two societies hold a joint convention and exhibition at Detroit, opening January 24, 1912. The Carnation Society at once accepted the report, concurred in its recommendation and adopted a resolution expressing the hope that the Rose Society will do likewise at its adjourned meeting at Baltimore in August.

The committee on president's address, R. H. Nicholson, J. A. Valentine and Joseph Hill, did not concur in the recommendation to revise the scale of points, but the same committee asked the society to concur in the secretary's recommendation that the by-laws be amended to permit the readmission of dropped members on the payment of $5. The society concurred.

J. A. Valentine proposed the erection of a memorial tablet for the late Fred Dorner and the secretary was instructed to communicate with the members in regard to a popular subscription.

On the closing date F. Dorner & Sons Co., Lafayette, staged two seedlings which, in spite of their having suffered somewhat on their journey of 1,000 miles, scored high enough to earn certificates: Dark crimson, 87 points; cerise, 86 points.

THE SMOKER.

The florists of Boston, not content with the reception and ball scheduled in the official program for Wednesday evening, March 29, gave a smoker at the Hotel Somerset Thursday evening, March 30, thereby putting one over on the committee that allotted the local people only one evening for their hospitalities. The smoker was held in the great ballroom of the Somerset, over 400 gathering about the round tables. A fine collation consisting of Boston's favorite dish, ale, sandwiches, salads, etc., was served. Colored minstrels provided a vaudeville entertainment and there were speeches by Mayor Fitzpatrick, F. R. Pierson, George Asmus, Robert Craig, J. K. M. L. Farquhar, W. W. Castle, Chester I. Campbell, his assistant, and others. It was a late hour before the festivities closed and those present voted it one of the most successful features of a week filled with eminent successes.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETS.

The executive committee of the S. A. F. held a two days' session at Boston, March 28 and 29, with an adjournment to Baltimore, where a session was held April 4. Those present at the Boston session were: Ex-president F. R. Pierson, President George Asmus, Vice-president R. Vincent, Secretary Dorner, Treasurer Kasting, Directors W. J. Vesey, Eugene Dailedouze, Robert Craig, E. Allan Peirce and H. A. Bunyard—the full board except for W. N. Rudd. The program for the Baltimore convention was outlined, rules adopted for the trade display, and a great deal of routine work dispatched. One of the details was the adoption of a resolution to the effect that the National Flower Show should be a triennial affair.

PARTY TO CROMWELL.

All the leading New England growers kept open house while the National Flower Show was in progress in Boston, and for several days after. They had visitors by the score and in some cases by the hundred. Many of those who attended the show stopped, either going or returning, at Cromwell, Conn., to inspect the establishment of A. N. Pierson, Inc., and March 29 W. R. Pierson escorted a party of twenty-five from Boston, entertaining them at dinner at the hotel in Cromwell and providing a special parlor car for the return to Boston in the evening.

James Wheeler.

Much of the success of the National Flower Show was due to Mr. Wheeler's efficiency as superintendent.

EXHIBITION ECHOES.

Duncan Finlayson placed on exhibition March 31 superb plants of Dendrobium Wardianum and nobile, the finest dendrobes in the exhibition.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club entertained over 1,000 at their reception in Paul Revere hall March 29 and all appeared to enjoy themselves.

It was really surprising how many accosted J. C. Hatcher, of Amsterdam, N. Y., with "How are you feeling, Elliott?" The Amsterdam asparagus specialist bears a striking resemblance to the Brighton asparagus king.

F. R. Pierson was a tired but happy man when the doors closed April 2. Mr. Pierson has practically lived in Boston for months and has even had to postpone council meetings in his home city and allow mayoral duties to rest on account of the show.

The car ride to historic Concord and Lexington March 30 was enjoyed by 150 ladies. This was under the auspices of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club. There was a lecturer on each car and lunch was served en route.

The gold plated Syracuse plow in the exhibit of T. J. Grey Co., with a wooden plow 140 years old, attracted a lot of attention.

Many of the large exhibitors from a distance, such as W. A. Manda, Bobbink & Atkins, Julius Roehrs, F. R. Pierson Co., Robert Craig Co. and others, sold all or a large part of their exhibits. All of Bobbink & Atkins' huge bay trees were sold.

Mrs. W. H. Elliott entertained the Ladies' S. A. F. at her beautiful Brighton home March 31. Lunch was served and a business session held. About 100 attended.

John Dunbar, of Rochester, N. Y., delivered an interesting illustrated lecture on "Trees and Shrubs" in Paul Revere hall March 31. It is, however, difficult to get an audience to attend any lectures or business sessions while there is so much of interest in the exhibition.

Peter Fisher's silver medal carnation, Benora, caught on and Mr. Fisher booked orders for over 50,000 cuttings during the show. And yet the carnation men say March is too late for their meeting! He did not show his new cerise variety, Gorgeous, to be introduced next year, as he is propagating it heavily.

Farquhar's group contained some plants in flower of the beautiful new Chinese Lilium myriophyllum, one of the most charming of the whole genus. The pure white trumpet flowers have a delightful odor.

F. R. Pierson's beautiful specimens of nephrolepis in eighteen varieties were a constant center of attraction. It would seem as though there would soon be this number of forms of Killarney rose. We noted white, double white, pink, double pink, deep pink, red, variegated and light pink, and the end is not yet.

The English visitors were charmed with the exhibition and surprised at its dimensions for a spring show. Their chief criticism was of the tendency on the part of nearly all exhibitors to overcrowd their displays and the lack of artistic arrangement, as compared with European shows. They suggested that it would be a good thing to have one or two men like Cypher, of Cheltenham, over to show us how to arrange groups effectively. There is no doubt of the justice of this criticism, not only of this, but of practically all other American flower shows.

The greenhouse builders, hose men and other dealers in sundries all report fine business, and while all would have been glad to see the show continue longer, they appreciate a rest from the most strenuous ten days they have had.

LADIES' S. A. F.

The Ladies' Society of American Florists was entertained right royally and thanks are returned to the ladies of the Boston committee and Gardeners' and Florists' Club, for the good times. Espe-

High commendation to Waite's Interlocking Steel Co., Newburgh, N. Y., for exhibit of steel bench frames, etc.

By way of explanation it may be said that a large number of other meritorious exhibits were given S. A. F. certificates and other awards at preceding August conventions, and therefore could not be considered by this committee.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

At the closing session of the annual convention of the American Carnation Society, Secretary Baur presented the report of the joint committee of the Carnation and Rose Societies in the matter of the 1912 meeting. The committee, composed of the two boards of directors, voted 7 to 2 to recommend that the two societies hold a joint convention and exhibition at Detroit, opening January 24, 1912. The Carnation Society at once accepted the report, concurred in its recommendation and adopted a resolution expressing the hope that the Rose Society will do likewise at its adjourned meeting at Baltimore in August.

The committee on president's address, R. H. Nicholson, J. A. Valentine and Joseph Hill, did not concur in the recommendation to revise the scale of points, but the same committee asked the society to concur in the secretary's recommendation that the by-laws be amended to permit the readmission of dropped members on the payment of $5. The society concurred.

J. A. Valentine proposed the erection of a memorial tablet for the late Fred Dorner and the secretary was instructed to communicate with the members in regard to a popular subscription.

On the closing date F. Dorner & Sons Co., Lafayette, staged two seedlings which, in spite of their having suffered somewhat on their journey of 1,000 miles, scored high enough to earn certificates: Dark crimson, 87 points; cerise, 86 points.

THE SMOKER.

The florists of Boston, not content with the reception and ball scheduled in the official program for Wednesday evening, March 29, gave a smoker at the Hotel Somerset Thursday evening, March 30, thereby putting one over on the committee that allotted the local people only one evening for their hospitalities. The smoker was held in the great ballroom of the Somerset, over 400 gathering about the round tables. A fine collation consisting of Boston's favorite dish, ale, sandwiches, salads, etc., was served. Colored minstrels provided a vaudeville entertainment and there were speeches by Mayor Fitzpatrick, F. R. Pierson, George Asmus, Robert Craig, J. K. M. L. Farquhar, W. W. Castle, Chester I. Campbell, his assistant, and others. It was a late hour before the festivities closed and those present voted it one of the most successful features of a week filled with eminent successes.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETS.

The executive committee of the S. A. F. held a two days' session at Boston, March 28 and 29, with an adjournment to Baltimore, where a session was held April 4. Those present at the Boston session were: Ex-president F. R. Pierson, President George Asmus, Vice president R. Vincent, Secretary Dorner, Treasurer Kasting, Directors W. J. Vesey, Eugene Dailedouze, Robert Craig, E. Allan Peirce and H. A. Bunyard the full board except for W. N. Rudd. The program for the Baltimore convention was outlined, rules adopted for the trade display, and a great deal of routine work dispatched. One of the details was the adoption of a resolution to the effect that the National Flower Show should be a triennial affair.

PARTY TO CROMWELL.

All the leading New England growers kept open house while the National Flower Show was in progress in Boston, and for several days after. They had visitors by the score and in some cases by the hundred. Many of those who attended the show stopped, either going or returning, at Cromwell, Conn., to inspect the establishment of A. N. Pierson, Inc., and March 29 W. R. Pierson escorted a party of twenty-five from Boston, entertaining them at dinner at the hotel in Cromwell and providing a special parlor car for the return to Boston in the evening.

James Wheeler.

Much of the success of the National Flower Show was due to Mr. Wheeler's efficiency as superintendent.

EXHIBITION ECHOES.

Duncan Finlayson placed on exhibition March 31 superb plants of Dendrobium Wardianum and nobile, the finest dendrobiums in the exhibition.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club entertained over 1,000 at their reception in Paul Revere hall March 29 and all appeared to enjoy themselves.

It was really surprising how many escorted J. C. Hatcher, of Amsterdam, N. Y., with "How are you feeling, Elliott?" The Amsterdam asparagus specialist bears a striking resemblance to the Brighton asparagus king.

F. R. Pierson was a tired but happy man when the doors closed April 2. Mr. Pierson has practically lived in Boston for months and has even had to postpone council meetings in his home city and allow mayoral duties to rest on account of the show.

The car ride to historic Concord and Lexington March 30 was enjoyed by 150 ladies. This was under the auspices of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club. There was a lecturer on each car and lunch was served en route.

The gold plated Syracuse plow in the exhibit of T. J. Grey Co., with a wooden plow 140 years old, attracted a lot of attention.

Many of the large exhibitors from a distance, such as W. A. Manda, Bobbink & Atkins, Julius Roehrs, F. R. Pierson Co., Robert Craig Co. and others, sold all or a large part of their exhibits. All of Bobbink & Atkins' huge bay trees were sold.

Mrs. W. H. Elliott entertained the Ladies' S. A. F. at her beautiful Brighton home March 31. Lunch was served and a business session held. About 100 attended.

John Dunbar, of Rochester, N. Y., delivered an interesting illustrated lecture on "Trees and Shrubs" in Paul Revere hall March 31. It is, however, difficult to get an audience to attend any lectures or business sessions while there is so much of interest in the exhibition.

Peter Fisher's silver medal carnation, Benora, caught on and Mr. Fisher booked orders for over 50,000 cuttings during the show. And yet the carnation men say March is too late for their meeting! He did not show his new cerise variety, Gorgeous, to be introduced next year, as he is propagating it heavily.

Farquhar's group contained some plants in flower of the beautiful new Chinese Lilium myriophyllum, one of the most charming of the whole genus. The pure white trumpet flowers have a delightful odor.

F. R. Pierson's beautiful specimens of nephrolepis in eighteen varieties were a constant center of attraction. It would seem as though there would soon be this number of forms of Kilmarney rose. We noted white, double white, pink, double pink, deep pink, red, variegated and light pink, and the end is not yet.

LADIES' S. A. F.

The Ladies' Society of American Florists was entertained right royally and thanks are returned to the ladies of the Boston committee and Gardeners' and Florists' Club, for the good times. Espe cially did all enjoy the hearty welcome extended by Mrs. W. H. Elliott at her new home in Brighton, Mass., Friday, and last but not least, do we mention that the silver vase given for best table decorations by the Ladies' S. A. F. was awarded to Hoffman, the florist of Boston.

Mrs. Chas. H. Maynard, Sec'y.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

[George Asmus, president of the Society of American Florists, made the following address in opening the meeting held at Boston, March 31.]

It is with great pleasure I address you, ladies and gentlemen of the Society of American Florists, at this gathering here during the first spring meeting attempted by our organization in amalgamation with our kindred societies.

It is the first time that the combination of holding flower shows, conventions and trade exhibits has been attempted, and it is for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it has met with a general feeling of success by the different societies participating, and in view of the fact that our annual convention will take place as usual in Baltimore in August, the officers and members of the board of directors did not deem it advisable to interfere with the usual program of that meeting. I will, therefore, as briefly as possible, bid you, the members of the bodies participating in this gathering, a most cordial welcome in behalf of the Society of American Florists.

This gathering is the fulfillment of one of my most beautiful dreams. I for a number of years have thought that the concentration of all interested at the time of the year when the greatest number of varieties of flowers are obtainable, namely, the spring, would be ideal for a convention.

There are a great many things favorable to a spring meeting, one in particular being the time of the year to make displays of the goods we are most interested in, another being the doing away with excessive railroad travel, and time devoted to going to the different conventions when they are held separately in different cities and at different times.

We are all busy people and time means money with all of us. It has been said that we have more time in August than at any other time of the year for convention purposes. This is true when a convention is taken in the way of recreation instead of business. I take the stand that conventions properly attended are strictly business, particularly when carried on as one would be by the amalgamation of the different societies, such as are represented by this, the second National Flower Show.

While our membership has slowly increased, it is not an increase such as would be justified by the work done by our organization. When there are so many large questions constantly coming up, and which are of vital importance to the success of our business, it would seem two meetings a year were almost a necessity. Then again the big displays that would naturally follow such spring meetings would be of almost priceless value in the way of stimulating advertising.

In the cities where such conventions and exhibitions were held, they would be self-sustaining to a certain extent, and it is not necessary that these exhibitions and conventions be held in the very largest cities, but any city of a population of 200,000 or more would perhaps be as good, taking into consideration the great good exhibitions of this kind would do local communities, as such exhibitions could not help arousing a great horticultural interest to the public at large, and this would be one of the ways our organization would do a great horticultural good.

While there is no doubt about the grand hospitality that has been extended to the different societies at their meetings in the past, and while there is an open welcome in the hearts of all florists for their brethren in business, we know that in some instances in towns and small cities the work falls upon a few people, and the precedent for entertainment having been established has become a custom, and has not always been an easy matter for the consideration of the local people. Instead of being anything of that kind to a large city, it would be just the reverse. It should mean such a big horticultural boom to that particular city, or section wherein same was held, that they would be more than recompensed for any trouble they may have had.

I sincerely hope that the talks which follow after the close of my few remarks will be favorable to a continuation of the combined society meetings annually in the spring of each year.

I wish here to give credit to the untiring efforts of our chairman of the National Flower Show Committee, F. R. Pierson, of Tarrytown, N. Y., also to the members of that committee, as well as to the Board of Control and to local horticultural organizations who have been untiring in their efforts to make this show the great success it has been. But few on the inside know the great amount of work and detail there is in connection with an enormous undertaking of this kind, but it has been ever thus in the workings of our society. Untiring unselfishness for the general good of all has been the watchword of the great majority of the members of this society. Let us assist them at any and all times it is in our power. Nor must we think we have achieved the greatest, or reached the top of the ladder, but put our knowledge and thoughts to greater things, many of which are in their infancy, and which I will dwell upon in my address at the August convention.

One of my predecessors, Mr. Valentine, of Denver, in his address before the convention at Cincinnati, recommended the setting aside of certain hours for the meetings of florists who are interested in the different branches of the business, such as the Retail Section, Carnation Society, Rose Society, etc., which at that time created a very favorable impression. I was one of those who were deeply impressed with the idea, and believe that the present meeting has to a great extent covered a great many of the ideas advanced in his recommendation.

Our business, branching out as it does, and specializing itself as it has, and will continue to do from this on, must have individual organizations to further their specific purposes.

I do not suppose that we can have an exhibition on so elaborate a scale as this each year, but with the combined efforts of the Carnation, Rose and Sweet Pea Societies, and additional premiums for plants, etc., I think a good annual spring show ought to be a successful feature from all points of view, and would recommend to you the consideration of a plan whereby the advisability of such be considered.

The Society of American Florists is not a society with any one object in view, but the general promotion of all interests. We want the membership of the members of these organizations in the mother society. We should support them, and they should support us, as we should be one in purpose and one in accord.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

[W. F. Kasting, treasurer of the Society of American Florists, presented a report, of which the following is a summary, at the meeting at Boston, March 31.]

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

[H. B. Dörner, secretary of the Society of American Florists, presented the following report at the meeting at Boston, March 31.]

As the regular secretary's report was given at the convention held during the summer, the report at this time will be in the nature of a supplementary one, covering the time from the last convention up to date.

The financial statement attached to this report, as well as the treasurer's report, shows a gratifying increase in the general fund and a marked increase in the permanent fund. During the year, the fees of twenty-eight members were added to this fund. As has been the custom in the past, the executive board has ordered that all interest on both general and permanent fund be added to the permanent fund.

The trade exhibit of 1910 was unusually successful. The entire receipts for sale of space were $2,460.43. The total expenditure, including the superintendent's salary, was $944.52, leaving a balance of $1,515.91 in the treasury. This was without doubt the most successful trade exhibition ever held by the S. A. F.

A comparison of the membership of 1909 and 1910 may be of interest:

	Life.	Annual.	Total.
1910	247	826	1,073

During the year, 228 new members were taken in. This number also included old members reinstated. Of this number, thirteen entered as life members. In addition to these, fifteen members were transferred from the annual to the life membership roll. The total number of life members added during the year was twenty-eight.

We are now past the 1,000 mark and have raised our goal to the 2,000 mark. Let us hope that by united effort we will reach that mark in a few years, instead of the twenty-seven necessary to reach the 1,000 mark. This could be done easily if each member made an effort and secured one new member.

This would make our membership 2,146 instead of 1,073.

Up to date, fifteen have been added to the life membership roll. Eleven are transfers and four are new members. Up to March 29, forty-seven new members have been taken in. The total number of members now in good standing is 854. This number includes the life members, pioneer members and those annual members who have paid their 1911 dues.

Since our last report, in August, 1910, twenty-six registrations have been made. The plants registered were as follows: One coleus, thirteen chrysanthemums, one canna, eight geraniums, three roses. A complete list of registrations for the year will be given at the August convention.

THE FINAL RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas the S. A. F., in the holding of its second National Flower Show in the city of Boston, is deeply indebted to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston and their ladies, Mayor Fitzgerald, the press, and the public of Boston, for courtesies extended and assistance rendered during the period of the show,

And whereas the National Flower Show Committee, through its Board of Control and its efficient managers, have all performed their duties in a manner entirely satisfactory to the society,

And whereas Frank R. Pierson, the chairman of the National Flower Show

Committee, has given unlimited time and services to make the show a success,

Be it Resolved, That the society extend its most heartfelt thanks for such courtesies and assistance rendered, and the entertainment so liberally furnished.

Furthermore Resolved, That the society feels that the show has been an unqualified success, due greatly to the efforts of those mentioned.

And be it Further Resolved, That these resolutions be extended upon the members of the society, and copies sent to the organization's members.

ROSE SOCIETY'S PRESIDENT.

The election of Adolph Farenwald as president of the American Rose Society is a fitting recognition of the hearty support that this able rosarian has given to furthering the interests of the national society. A brief sketch of Mr. Farenwald's career is of especial interest at this time.

Adolph Farenwald was born at Stettin, Germany, forty-eight years ago. When 14 years of age he commenced his apprenticeship as a florist, serving for three years at places in Hamburg, Dresden and Stettin. He then went to a rose nursery in Norwich, England, where he remained for two years. Mr. Farenwald came to this country in 1885. He worked for one and a half years at the Dreer nurseries at Riverton and for another year or more at several small places. In October, 1888, he became foreman for Joseph Heacock, at Wyncote, Pa., where he was successful with roses for cut flowers. Beauties, Brides and Maids were exceptionally well done. In April, 1898, Mr. Farenwald started his place at Roslyn, Pa. His success with Liberty, then a new rose, was almost phenomenal. Beauty, too, did finely for him. Richmond and Killarney now are his specialties and both thrive under his care. His place has steadily grown until today it is one of the large, as well as one of the best, cut flower establishments near Philadelphia. Mr. Farenwald's success is due to thorough grounding in floriculture, his quick perception of the needs of the rose and how best to fill them, and to his appreciation of the value of fine stock. AMERICAN GLADIOLUS SOCIETY.

In opening the meeting held at Boston March 30 President Isaac S. Hendrickson said: "A good many people, especially those of the trade, are about tired of joining trade societies; we must depend largely for new members among the amateurs." But Secretary Gage reported 172 names on the membership roll. Financial Secretary H. Youell reported only fourteen delinquent in the payment of dues. Treasurer Fuld showed total receipts of $368.10, disbursements of $282.68 and balance on hand of $85.42. Since last meeting 30,000 leaflets have been dis-cially did all enjoy the hearty welcome extended by Mrs. W. H. Elliott at her new home in Brighton, Mass., Friday, and last but not least, do we mention that the silver vase given for best table decorations by the Ladies' S. A. F. was awarded to Hoffman, the florist of Boston.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

[H. B. Dorper, secretary of the Society of American Florists, presented the following report at the meeting at Boston, March 31.]

As the regular secretary's report was given at the convention held during the summer, the report at this time will be in the nature of a supplementary one, covering the time from the last convention up to date.

The financial statement attached to this report, as well as the treasurer's report, shows a gratifying increase in the general fund and a marked increase in the permanent fund. During the year, the fees of twenty-eight members were added to this fund. As has been the custom in the past, the executive board has ordered that all interest on both general and permanent fund be added to the permanent fund.

The trade exhibit of 1910 was unusually successful. The entire receipts for sale of space were $2,460.13. The total expenditure, including the superintendent's salary, was $944.52, leaving a balance of $1,515.61 in the treasury. This was without doubt the most successful trade exhibition ever held by the S. A. F.

A comparison of the membership of 1909 and 1910 may be of interest:

	1909	1910	1911
Male	219	217	228
Female	217	226	228

During the year, 228 new members were taken in. This number also included old members reinstated. Of this number, thirteen entered as life members. In addition to these, fifteen members were transferred from the annual to the life membership roll. The total number of life members added during the year was twenty-eight.

We are now past the 1,000 mark and have raised our goal to the 2,000 mark. Let us hope that by united effort we will reach that mark in a few years, instead of the twenty-seven necessary to reach the 1,000 mark. This could be done easily if each member made an effort and secured one new member.

This would make our membership 2,116 instead of 1,973.

Up to date, fifteen have been added to the life membership roll. Eleven are transfers and four are new members. Up to March 29, forty seven new members have been taken in. The total number of members now in good standing is 854. This number includes the life members, pioneer members and those annual members who have paid their 1911 dues.

Since our last report, in August, 1910, twenty six registrations have been made. The plants registered were as follows: One coleus, thirteen chrysanthemums, one cannula, eight geraniums, three roses. A complete list of registrations for the year will be given at the August convention.

THE FINAL RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas the S. A. F., in the holding of its second National Flower Show in the city of Boston, is deeply indebted to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston and their ladies, Mayor Fitzgerald, the press, and the public of Boston, for courtesies extended and assistance rendered during the period of the show.

And whereas the National Flower Show Committee, through its Board of Control and its efficient managers, have all performed their duties in a manner entirely satisfactory to the society.

And whereas Frank R. Pierson, the chairman of the National Flower Show

Committee, has given unlimited time and services to make the show a success.

Be it Resolved, That the society extend its most heartfelt thanks for such courtesies and assistance rendered, and the entertainment so liberally furnished.

Furthermore Resolved, That the society feels that the show has been an unqualified success, due greatly to the efforts of those mentioned.

And be it Further Resolved, That these resolutions be extended from the members of the society, and copies sent to the organization's members.

ROSE SOCIETY'S PRESIDENT

The election of Adolph Farenwald as president of the American Rose Society is a fitting recognition of the hearty support that this able rosarian has given to furthering the interests of the national society. A brief sketch of Mr. Farenwald's career is of especial interest at this time.

Adolph Farenwald was born at Stettin, Germany, forty eight years ago. When 11 years of age he commenced his apprenticeship as a florist, serving for three years at places in Hamburg, Dresden and Stettin. He then went to a rose nursery in Norwich, England, where he remained for two years. Mr. Farenwald came to this country in 1885. He worked for one and a half years at the Dreer nurseries at Riverton and for another year or more at several small places. In October, 1888, he became foreman for Joseph Hancock, at Wyncote, Pa., where he was successful with roses for cut flowers. Beauties, Brides and Maids were exceptionally well done. In April, 1898, Mr. Farenwald started his place at Roslyn, Pa. His success with Liberty, then a new rose, was almost phenomenal. Beauty, too, did finely for him. Richmond and Killarney now are his specialties and both thrive under his care. His place has steadily grown until today it is one of the large, as well as one of the best, cut flower establishments near Philadelphia. Mr. Farenwald's success is due to thorough grounding in floriculture, his quick perception of the needs of the rose and how best to fill them, and to his appreciation of the value of fine stock. AMERICAN GLADIOLUS SOCIETY

In opening the meeting held at Boston March 30 President Isaac S. Hendrickson said: "A good many people, especially those of the trade, are about tired of joining trade societies; we must depend largely for new members among the amateurs." But Secretary Gage reported 172 names on the membership roll. Financial Secretary H. Youell reported only fourteen delinquent in the payment of dues. Treasurer Fuld showed total receipts of $368.10, disbursements of $282.68 and balance on hand of $85.42. Since last meeting 30,000 leaflets have been distributed, 1,000 copies of Bulletin No. 1, and 2,000 copies of Bulletin No. 2. Several of the latest additions to the membership roll are Holland gladiolus bulb growers.

The exhibition to be held at Baltimore in August was discussed and plans made for the largest display of cut blooms ever staged by the growers of gladioli. Several special prizes were pledged. It also was recommended by the exhibition committee that all organizations holding shows in season be urged to increase their premiums for gladioli. The committee, H. Youell, L. Merton Gage and L. B. Judson, also made the following recommendation in regard to Rules to govern the awarding of certificates of merit and suggesting a scale of points on judging:

Your committee feels that this is such a vital and far-reaching matter to those who exhibit seedlings for certificates, and to the many points to be determined upon, that it is best to submit the following, and ask for a full and free discussion, as the best solution of a difficult problem and one which shall be satisfactory to all:

After considerable discussion the report and scale were adopted.

Prof. A. C. Beal was present, representing the society's trial ground at Cornell University. A letter from Prof. Craig was read, and one from a European firm regarding the grading of sizes in quoting prices. The bulletin committee was instructed to get out another issue before the Baltimore meeting. J. Keur, of Hillegom, Holland, called attention to what he considers the harmful practice of some growers who cut the bloom and later sell the bulb. He also pointed out that some fine varieties never produce large bulbs and that therefore grading mixtures by size is not desirable.

GLADIOLUS NOMENCLATURE.

[Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y., chairman of the Nomenclature Committee of the American Gladiolus Society, presented the following report and recommendations, which were adopted, at the meeting at Boston March 30.]

A good physician, before prescribing for his patient, usually makes a diagnosis of his case and I believe that the same principle should apply to the present condition of the gladiolus nomenclature, and, so far as my knowledge goes, I will proceed to diagnose the case.

Gladioli have been grown for more than a century, but not until a few years ago has there been extraordinary interest taken in their extensive culture, and up to which time there really had been no trouble in the renaming or the duplication of names. From the year 1902 to 1907 there were distributed, in this country alone, over one million new seedlings and named novelties of most unusual types, and many bearing colors and combinations of colors never before seen or thought possible by the average grower of this flower. Such stock (and no wonder!) attracted the attention of many growers of other flowers, as well as some who had never grown for the market, immediately after possessing which these new gladiolus growers, without the knowledge of existing varieties as well as being ignorant as to what had already been done toward naming many of these new seedlings, started in to mark, classify and establish a named list of their own. Under such conditions, is it any wonder that many varieties have been renamed? The wonder to me is that we have not more of them. So much for my version of the cause of renaming.

In most if not every department of horticulture as well as floriculture, the grower in selecting names for his plants, flowers, fruit, etc., aside from the botanical standpoint, tries, so far as is possible, to select names which will indicate to the purchaser of his product some particularly good attribute which his plant, flower or fruit possesses. It may be color, size, form, or some characteristic which, as said above, he wishes to imply in the name. Now, with this idea in mind, is it any wonder that there are today two, three, or even more varieties of gladioli bearing the same name?

We have now diagnosed these two cases. What remedy, and how shall we apply it? is the question.

We have a well-organized society, and while as yet but few foreign members, I believe we will be able to secure the cooperation of those foreign growers who may not join our society, and anticipating this, I trust I may be permitted to offer the following procedure as a remedy and the application of the same.

First: I would have our society possess, both at the trial grounds and at the office of our secretary, a copy of the catalogue of every gladiolus grower in this country and Europe, from which a list of all existing varieties, together with descriptions of the same, could be made up and, with many varieties, we could at the same time secure the name of the originator, and also in many cases the year in which the variety was first disseminated.

Your committee could then easily ascertain where names were duplicated and upon such information request those growers having such varieties to send to the trial grounds three to five bulbs for testing, accompanied with the following statement:

- (1) Name of variety;
- (2) Name of grower offering the variety;
- (3) Full description, including form, color, habit, etc.;
- (4) By whom originated;
- (5) The date or year of introduction.

With this information and a thorough trial upon the grounds at Ithaca, there should be no doubt as to which grower should be entitled to the use of the disputed name, which should be withdrawn by the other claimants upon the receipt of such request from the superintendent of the trial grounds, endorsed by the president and secretary of the society.

The remedy and application of same to the second complication (renaming) is more difficult, the proper adjustment of which will depend largely upon the individual assistance of the members of our society, both professional and amateur.

To the professional grower I would recommend the following:

First, when sending out mixtures of any kind, either general or under color selection, that he have printed on the reverse side of every label, a notice that the mixture so offered is either composed of named varieties, or seedlings under process of classification, or both, and the purchaser should be warned against naming any of such, without first consulting the producer and submitting a spike of the variety which he may wish to name.

Second, I would recommend, wherever or whenever any grower may have knowledge of the renaming of any variety, that he give to the superintendent of our trial grounds such information, accompanied with three to five bulbs of the variety so renamed, together with three to five bulbs of the variety bearing the correct name.

This last suggestion would be equally applicable to the amateur, and by such cooperation I feel sure we would be but a short time in clearing up the gladiolus nomenclature.

It is true that in the execution of such measures as I have suggested more or less disappointment is sure to fall to some growers, and I, for one, will be only too glad to take my medicine with a smile, if, in the end, the loyal and enthusiastic amateur as well as the professional grower can be assured of protection against this practice, the elimination of which I believe will stimulate greater demand for our favorite flower and which can certainly be accomplished by our society, but only through the hearty and unselfish cooperation of its members.

THE BUILDING OF A BUSINESS.

[A paper by August F. Poehlmann, of Morton Grove, Ill., read before the American Rose Society, in convention at Boston, Mass., March 25 to April 1, 1911.]

In compliance with a wish expressed by our worthy president and vice-president, I have prepared a paper on the "Development of an Up-to-Date Rose-Growing Establishment," which, I believe, will also apply to other interests. I can't quite understand why I was selected, but I have an idea the gentlemen referred to know it's one of my short suits. In deference, therefore, to those present, I will confine myself to a few brief remarks, touching the subject in a general way.

The development of any business depends not only on one or two things, but upon a happy combination of various conditions, properly applied. These conditions may be classified, I would say, under the following terms: Ability, integrity, demand, and locality and environments.

Ability and Integrity.

Classed separately, I would say, ability includes the faculty to accomplish, to build, to grow good stock, to manage well, to anticipate and have power to do. As a rule, most large, up-to-date rose growing establishments of the present day began business in a small way. Spurred on by initial success, the earnings were reinvested from time to time to provide for the increasing demand of the product. It becomes second nature, then, to plan extensions and improvements, which in regular course create new heads. Responsibility is shifted. The work becomes more specific; each head is a specialist. This system is general throughout; therefore, on the ability to do depends largely the ability to supply demand. Ability to discern the value of new varieties, by previous knowledge of parents or otherwise, and to anticipate the demand for these, can properly be

TREE PLANTING BY FLORISTS

PUBLIC-SPIRITED FLORISTS.

What They Might Accomplish.

The tale from the potting-shed is continued. This time it is along slightly different lines.

Are we worrying because there is nothing new? It is strange we are never satisfied, but if we were, how quiet things would seem! The florist feels—sometimes, at least—that he is a sort of under dog. Everything goes wrong with him. He never can enjoy himself like other folks. People say to him, "How perfectly lovely it must be to work in a hothouse, with all the beautiful flowers about you!" The florist knows better. He wants a change—something new. Some one has said that "there is nothing new under the sun." Perhaps that is true. Who can tell?

There are a whole lot of things, old pal, that go to make this old ball well worth knowing. What if we do knock and knock and knock when things go wrong? We can help a little to make things brighter if we only would. The trouble is, we don't think. When we run across an opportunity to do some good, or to start something worth while, we usually let the other fellow beat us to it or leisurely take our time. Why can't we try to do something and be somebody? Nobody is going to earn our three "squares" for us—at least not yet.

I have always wondered, fellows, why it is that the florist does not exert more influence in the shaping of our civic affairs. He does a lot, of course, but why not more? I have had several thoughts along that line lately and I am going to spring a few on you.

A Boom for Tree Planting.

Why is it that the florist isn't booming the tree planting question in his own community? Did you ever stop to think of the thousands of acres of fertile land that are going to waste along our public highways? Did you ever think that you could start a "Tree Preservation Society" in your own locality? Did you ever think that maybe you could do a lot toward educating the masses in your chosen line, and thereby increase your business? We can't always be in the receiving line. We must give occasionally. The change does us good.

What do you think would be the result if every florist appointed himself a committee of one to encourage the planting of nut-bearing and fruit-bearing trees along the roadsides? I propounded that question to a prominent farmer not long ago and he replied, "Why, every Tom, Dick and Harry would make our life a burden. They would help themselves and we couldn't prevent it." That is one way to consider it—rather a selfish way, however. Personally, I do not understand how the farmer would be disturbed. At first he might have more company along his fence lines than formerly, but if every one had the same thing to contend with it would be but a short time until people would wake up to the fact that they had no business to intrude. Over in Germany the plan is already being followed, and with great results. Think of the profit in nuts and fruits! Think of the effect millions of trees would have on climatic conditions! Then think of the beautiful highways! Give us the trees.

Over in Iowa they are trying to make the highways narrower, because only a narrow road is required for driving purposes. It is said, too, that by reducing the width, more than a half million acres will be available for cultivation. It strikes me that some farmers don't half farm the land they now have. It will be easy to remove the trees if the population becomes so dense that every inch of land is necessary for the people's support. We need the trees. The farmer doesn't need the land; at least, not while you and I are here.

Jolting the Road Commissioners.

Concerted action by the florists would go a long way toward securing what is needed in this matter. Why wouldn't it be a good plan to jolt your road commissioners? It seems to me that the best way would be to amend the law of road making so that it would include tree planting as well. It only costs about two per cent of the cost per mile of road construction to plant the same mile with trees. Say a mile of road costs $8,000; the cost of planting would be $160. How insignificant this is when you consider the benefit to be derived! Don't think that

A STERLING ESTABLISHMENT.

When Robert Lundstrom took possession of the property of the Sterling Floral Co., at Sterling, Ill., a few years ago, the establishment consisted of only a couple of small houses, but business was just beginning to grow and in the course of the next four or five years there was a steady addition to the plant, shown in the accompanying illustration, in which, however, one house 24x120 does not appear. Plans now in hand contemplate the erection of two more houses this season. It is in such towns as Sterling that the flower business is now having its fastest growth. All through the country, florists situated as Mr. Lundstrom is, are finding a demand for more stock than they can produce and they are building extensively this year.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Business during the National Flower Show was fairly good. The big exhibition consumed quite a lot of material, which materially relieved the market, and there is every prospect of satisfactory trade between now and Easter. The supply of Easter lily flowers arriving in a cut state is good. Easter quotations vary from $10 to $12.50 per hundred and about every grower is of the opinion that his crop will be just right. While a few Formosas are seen, the majority are giganteums, with a smaller proportion of multiflorums. Roses are in quite abundant supply; whites are selling extra well and on some days have been quite scarce. Best quality American Beauties maintain previous quotations and there is an active demand for Wards, Richmonds and Killarneys. Of Bon Silene and Safrano good flowers also are coming in. Hybrids, once so popular at this season, are now virtually a thing of the past. Carnations are selling at last week's rates and, thanks to continued cool weather, are of good quality.

Single violets are seen in much lessened numbers and will soon be over, but doubles will last for some time. Sweet peas are still improving in quality, and although abundant are moving freely. While all colors are represent-

A STERLING ESTABLISHMENT.

When Robert Lundstrom took possession of the property of the Sterling Floral Co., at Sterling, Ill., a few years ago, the establishment consisted of only a couple of small houses, but business was just beginning to grow and in the course of the next four or five years there was a steady addition to the plant, shown in the accompanying illustration, in which, however, one house 24x120 does not appear. Plans now in hand contemplate the erection of two more houses this season. It is in such towns as Sterling that the flower business is now having its fastest growth. All through the country, florists situated as Mr. Lundstrom is, are finding a demand for more stock than they can produce and they are building extensively this year.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Business during the National Flower Show was fairly good. The big exhibition consumed quite a lot of material, which materially relieved the market, and there is every prospect of satisfactory trade between now and Easter. The supply of Easter lily flowers arriving in a cut state is good. Easter quotations vary from $10 to $12.50 per hundred and about every grower is of the opinion that his crop will be just right. While a few Formosas are seen, the majority are giganteums, with a smaller proportion of multiflorums. Roses are in quite abundant supply; whites are selling extra well and on some days have been quite scarce. Best quality American Beauties maintain previous quotations and there is an active demand for Wards, Richmonds and Killarneys. Of Bon Silene and Safrano good flowers also are coming in. Hybrids, once so popular at this season, are now virtually a thing of the past. Carnations are selling at last week's rates and, thanks to continued cool weather, are of good quality.

Single violets are seen in much lessened numbers and will soon be over, but doubles will last for some time. Sweet peas are still improving in quality, and although abundant are moving freely. While all colors are represent ed, white, pink and lavender are the favorites. The supply of Dutch bulbous stock is still heavy, but should soon fall off. Cold weather has favored those wishing to retard these for Easter. Some good stocks are arriving, also an abundance of snapdragons. Spanish iris is as yet not overabundant. Gardenias are plentiful, as is lily of the valley. Cattleyas are only in moderate supply, but dendrobiums are abundant. Pansies are seen in large quantities and sell well; so do English primroses. There is a moderate call for greenery of all sorts.

Pot plant trade is now booming, all the specialists being up to their ears in work, ramblers, acacias, ericas, genistas, marguerites, spiræas, bulbous stock, fern dishes, palms and lilies all being in active demand.

Various Notes.

The flower markets, commission houses and seed stores have been crowded with visitors from all parts of the country and abroad for the last ten days; in fact, regular business has in some measure had to give way to receptions. Boston is glad to have had so many notable horticultural visitors, many more than have gathered at any previous S. A. F. convention.

The board of trustees of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society at a meeting April 1 voted the use of Horticultural hall for a large part of March, 1912, to R. & J. Farquhar & Co., for the purpose of displaying an extensive Japanese garden and other interesting features. Messrs. Farquhar will occupy the whole hall. The exhibition will continue two weeks and all receipts over running expenses will go to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. This exhibit will be on a more stupendous scale than has ever yet been attempted in America by any single exhibitor. The use of the halls was also voted to the New England fruit show for a big exhibition in October.

We are pleased to report Robert Montgomery, of Natick, as nearly recovered from his late sickness.

W. C. Bowditch, of Grove Hall, has an extra fine line of rambler roses, spiræas and pans of bulbous plants.

Albert Batley, of Maynard, is in the market with a grand lot of Giant ten weeks' stocks in four colors, also first-class flowers of Pink Delight, Beacon, Winsor and other carnations.

W. E. Turner and James Philbrick, of Woburn, are sending in thousands of fine pansies daily.

March maintained its reputation of being the windiest month of the year, but, contrary to general belief, the temperature was nearly normal, being 35.4 degrees, against an average of 35 degrees. Precipitation was 2.95 against an average of 4.08. April has during the first few days been bitterly cold, with high winds, sharp frosts and snow.

A. F. Coolidge, at the Boston Co-operative Market, has an excellent lot of cyclamens, azaleas and genistas.

John Barr's new variegated carnation, Mrs. B. P. Cheney, has a host of admirers and Mr. Barr has booked lots of orders for it.

Welch Bros. report satisfactory business in connection with their display at the National Flower Show. P. Welch was in evidence everywhere during the entire run of the big show and no one is more pleased at its financial success.

E. J. Rogean and Mann Bros. are each handling cut Lilium candidum.

The latter firm has a beautiful dark blue Spanish iris named Darling, and an abundance of speciosum lilies.

F. L. Hardy, of Natick, is in the market with quantities of superb snapdragons, which are eagerly bought.

Ernest Stickel, salesman for the Montrose Greenhouses, reports business as good. They shipped roses last week as far as Montreal and New Brunswick. Their roses are chiefly Richmond, the two Killarneys and Mrs. Ward.

The Halifax Garden Co. is having striking success with White Enchantress carnations this season. They made a big display of sweet peas and had also several thousand carnations at last week's show. Of sweet peas they now receive 5,000 to 6,000 daily.

W. C. Ward, of Quincy, the pansy specialist, plants practically all his houses to this popular flower. Thomas Pegler handles from 8,000 to 15,000 flowers daily from him.

A call at the local seed stores showed that all hands were rushed to the limit to keep abreast of orders. The continued cold weather has somewhat delayed counter trade and the season promises to be more prolonged than usual.

Letters received from J. W. Duncan, lately of this city and now of Spokane, Wash., show that he is busy on plans for new parks and will plant trees and shrubs heavily this spring. He has become quite settled in his new northwestern home.

One of the most beautiful wreaths I have seen for some time was a large one quite loosely made of Ericas melantha and Mediterranea mixed. The white and purple colors harmonized beautifully. The wreath was one of P. L. Carbone's for the late Mrs. E. V. R. Thayer's funeral April 1.

J. A. Pettigrew left for a visit to Chicago April 2, with a number of other city officials, including Mayor Fitzgerald, to study some of the municipal improvements of that city, including the parks and playgrounds.

The weather continues so cold here that nurserymen have so far been able to dig only a small quantity of nursery stock and it looks as though they would again experience a short, strenuous season.

The Baltimore boys were much in evidence during last week's exhibition, handing invitations to everyone to come there in August, and Boston as a result of the show will undoubtedly send one of the largest delegations it has ever sent to a convention.

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society, in common with the Boston Chamber of Commerce, has invited the American Nurserymen's Association to hold the 1911 convention in Boston in June next. Horticultural hall has been offered as a meeting place.

Charles Holbrow, of Brighton, has just pulled out two houses of sweet peas and planted them with tomatoes. He thinks there are no better houses than those of King construction.

OBITUARY.

Thomas T. Connor.

Thomas T. Connor, superintendent at Holmesdale, the estate of William Pollock, at Pittsfield, Mass., died March 28, at the age of 65 years, after an illness of several weeks from grip, with complications of Bright's disease.

He was born in Newbridge, Kildare county, Ireland, in 1846, but came to America in 1866 and made his home in Pittsfield, where he almost immediately began his long service with the Pollock family, first at Greytower and later at Holmesdale. He had a high reputation as a florist and landscape gardener. He married Miss Mary McCarthy, April 15, 1873. He is survived by five sons, Thomas P., head gardener on the estate of Col. O. H. Payne, at Westport, N. Y.; George W., of Pittsfield; Dr. John E., of Rochester; Dr. William H., of the United States navy, now stationed in Samoa; Robert J., and a foster daughter, Mrs. Edward Hunting, of Albany, N. Y.

William Clory.

A report of the death of William Clory, a grower at 411 South Tenth street, Coshocton, O., has just been received. No further particulars have yet been learned.

Mrs. Anton Brosch.

Mrs. Lister Beatrice Brosch, wife of Anton Brosch, Lynchburg, Va., died March 29, at St. Andrew's hospital, after suffering severely for several months. Her death was not unexpected, as her condition had been critical for two or three days. She was born in Lynchburg forty-seven years ago, and was married in October, 1883. Associated with her husband in the business of florist, she met with a large number of people who loved flowers, and whom she always received hospitably. In her business transactions she was the soul of honor. She is survived by her husband, by two sons, Emmett A. and Frank J. Brosch, and by four daughters, Theresa, Agnes K., Cecile L. and Lois E. Brosch.

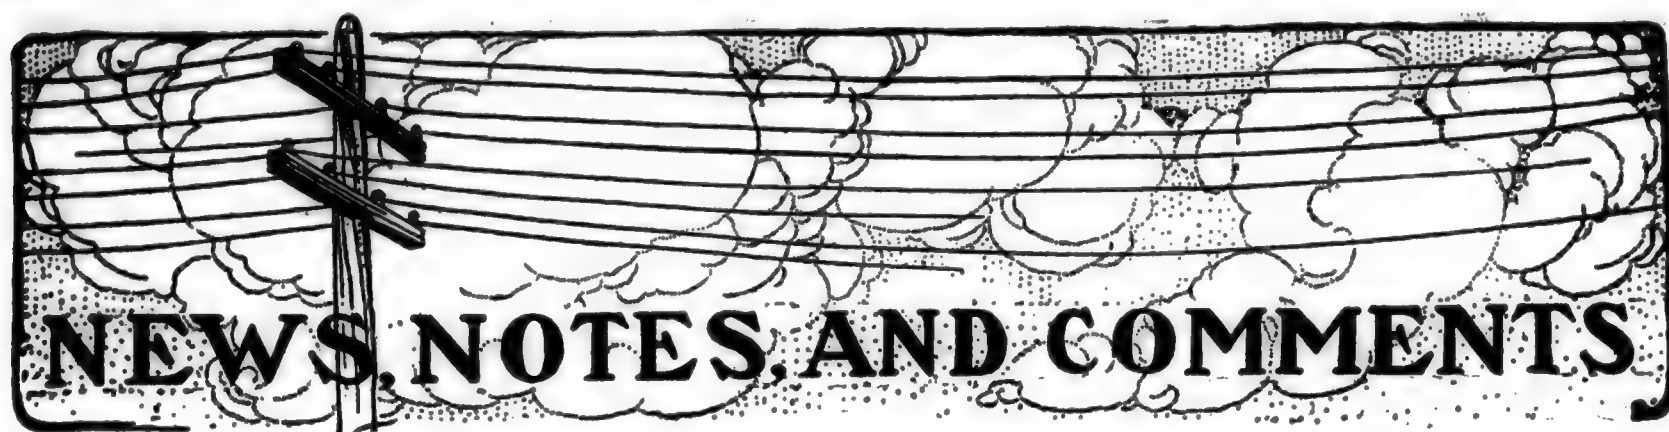

F. Haussmann.

F. Haussman, a well known nurseryman and florist of Los Angeles, Cal., died March 9, at the age of 56 years, after an illness of five months, leaving a widow and a son and daughter. The son, Milton, was only 22 years old. Grieving over his father's death, the young man became unnaturally morose and melancholy, and shot himself March 23, two weeks after his father's death. The daughter, Pauline, expects to manage the business.

MILDEW ON EUONYMUS.

Under separate cover I am sending a twig of variegated euonymus affected with something which looks like mildew. I have two lots of plants affected; one grown in a cool house and the other in a warm house, with plenty of light and air and water. Can you tell me what is the cause of this and give me a remedy? E. O.

The shoot forwarded was badly affected with mildew. This euonymus is hardy where the minimum temperature does not drop lower than 20 degrees below zero. A warm house would make it soft and an easy prey for mildew. If kept under glass at all, the house should be quite cold; in fact, a coldframe would be better than a house with artificial heat. Soft growths made during winter are likely to become mildewy, but if you keep the plants dormant during the short days, there is little likelihood of any trouble. The only remedy you can apply is to dust the plants with flowers of sulphur and keep them out of cold drafts. C. W.

Tyler, Tex.—Mrs. Frank Hewitt says that the last year's business was fine, in spite of the prolonged drought. Here, in eastern Texas, she says, there is a splendid water supply, the best of natural springs, which never fail. The fruit crop was damaged somewhat by the frost of February 21 to 24, but there is still a prospect of a good yield of peaches.

Exeter, N. H.—George H. McAlpine, who about a year ago purchased the tract of land known as the Wiggin field, is erecting on the property a Lord & Burnham iron-frame greenhouse, 60x400, to be used for the growing of roses. He will make a specialty of White Killarney and Richmond, for the Boston market. He was formerly connected with the greenhouses of W. H. Elliott, at Madbury, N. H.

White Hall, Ill.—Samuel Rimbey, proprietor of the White Hall Greenhouses, has a fine stock of plants ready for landscape work in the park and at private homes. He has had a good crop of sweet peas, with a steady sale for them, and there is a prospect of a heavy season's business.

Columbus, O.—The Columbus Floral Co. has received from the Foley Mfg. Co. the material for two more houses, 35x400, that are duplicates of the ones erected last year. Much additional light is secured by setting the glass the 24-inch way, thus saving one-third of the sash-bars with a corresponding gain in sunlight.

The business of the wholesale department will also be conducted hereafter at this new address; the entire basement and a large room at the rear of the retail store have been fitted up for wholesale purposes.

IT is surprising how many men make their business the operation of greenhouses and are content to get along without a printed letter-head.

TANK cypress, the grade that is used by the greenhouse builders, is scarce in the south and the material men who do not carry stocks are having their own troubles.

GLASS has reached a lower price than has heretofore been quoted this season, or in years. Indeed, so low is the price that it is thought it must entail a loss to the manufacturers.

NOTHING better illustrates the general prosperity in the trade, and the confidence that there is to be no check to that prosperity, than the extremely large addi-

THE American Gladiolus Society has just issued Bulletin No. 2, containing a number of short articles on the gladiolus and a list of the members of the society, keyed to show whether professional growers or amateurs.

A GROWER operating a fairly large range of houses, charging up salary for himself, interest on investment, depreciation and running expenses, finds it costs him 30 cents a square foot of bench space dropped as unprofitable several crops that are quite generally grown.

AFTER such a magnificent record as Boston has made with the second Na-the initial effort at Chicago in 1908, what city seeks the opportunity to carry the banner of floricultural progress on to yet greater heights? Don't all speak

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The latter part of last week afforded a strong contrast to the first part. The beginning of the week saw possibly the lowest prices and the lightest demand that have been noted during the lenten season, but there was a change March 30 and those who had booked the large shipping orders for carnations, to go out the last day of the month for the Saturday sales, found themselves in more or less of a predicament, as only the poorest of stock, the accumulations from the earlier days of the week, could then be had at the cheap prices. April opened with reduced receipts in practically all lines of stock and something like stable market conditions were quickly reestablished. Not that there is any shortage, but that supply and demand are now fairly well balanced.
 For this condition credit generally is given to the cold and darker weather.
 Where the early part of March was much warmer than normal, the latter part has been wintry. Those closest in touch with the situation say that crops have not run their course, but merely are held back by weather conditions.

As showing the effect of supply on demand, while there is no change in the situation as regards Beauties, there is scarcely any demand for them. Buyers have had so much trouble in getting their orders filled that they no longer accept orders calling for Beauties and those houses which have moderate receipts of first-class long Beauties find scarcely any call for them. Of Killarney, White Killarney and Richmond there continues to be an abundant supply, though the legitimate demand is now consuming the greater part of the receipts. The quality of the stock is excellent.

Carnations are coming in rather more plentifully than other flowers, but are cleaning up in good shape at prices that are normal for a fortnight before

ORDER EASTER

EVERYTHING YOU NEED IS HERE!

In our CUT FLOWER DEPARTMENT we are in a position to please the most critical buyers and at the same time our supply of stock is so large that we can do equally well by those whose requirement is quantity. In our FLORISTS' SUPPLIES DEPARTMENT we carry every article used in the trade in complete assortment. Can make prompt shipment.

CARNATIONS

Year after year we handle more Carnations than any other house in the west—possibly more than any other house in the country. It is the kind of stock that carries; that's why we do such a very large and steady shipping trade in Carnations. For Easter the supply will be extremely heavy and the quality extra good. Place a big order; you'll need them, for the Easter business increases every year.

Easter. Bulbous stock, which is much less plentiful, probably is helping the carnations. Daffodils, jonquils and tulips all are less abundant than at any time in months. Paper Whites, Romans and freesias seldom are seen. Predictions are made that practically all bulbous stock will be over by Easter, but some of the growers are nevertheless counting on their usual supply. There are heavy receipts of the southern outdoor bulbous stock and some of it is so fine that it is selling up to $10 per thousand, which is big money for this market. Single violets have practically disappeared, but doubles are holding out well. The market is overstocked with Easter lilies from growers whose stock is too early. Cattleyas are abundant, as is valley. Sweet peas show the effect of the dark weather; the winter bloomers are approaching the end of their season; supply is lighter and quality not so good.

There has been a sharp advance on ferns and there are those who predict that it will be impossible to meet the demand with strictly first-class stock within the next few weeks.

Easter Prospects.

With Easter rapidly approaching, there is little change in the prospect. There is reiterated report that practically all the lilies are short, though each grower adds: "I will have a fair quantity of long stock." That lilies of the shorter lengths will be abundant is shown by the disposition to shade prices where quantities are taken; strictly first-class long lilies are being closely held. It is considered that the weather conditions that are retarding rose and carnation crops will operate to increase the Easter cuts and improve the quality. Beauties will be the only scarcity. The retailers, both city and in the country, feel confident that the Easter supply will be large. The evidence of it is that while they are writing a lot of letters asking for quotations, they are in no hurry whatever to place orders. It indicates an immense rush as Easter approaches.

March Business.

"Comparisons are odious"—when they do not show in our favor—but it really is not possible to compare the business of March with the month in 1910. Easter came in March last year, whereas it was Lent all through last month. Supplies were large and prices weak all through the month, but the record of gross sales would have been quite satisfactory had it not been for the comparison with a year ago.

March Weather.

As a whole March was much warmer and much brighter than usual—the weather man's figures bear out what market conditions had already told. The first part of the month was warmer than the latter part, but the mean temperature was 39 degrees against a normal of 34.4. The percentage of possible sunshine was 63 against a normal of only 52. There were eleven clear days and nine partly cloudy, with only eleven on which there was no sun, a most unusual record for March. The rainfall was slightly more than half the normal and has been since January 1 about two inches less than in the average year.

LILIES TODAY

WE OFFER FINE STOCK

It is a fact well known in the Chicago market that there never are any better Lilies than Randall's. Year after year, no matter how scarce really good Lilies may be, we always have a large supply of fine, long-stemmed Lilies. These are true Giganteums; there will be plenty of short Lilies this year, but you can get long-stemmed Lilies if you order of us. Fine hard flowers that will ship well. Packed at the greenhouses in cases of 100 and shipped in the original package. Time to insure your supply. Place a big order today, and push your sales.

KILLARNEYS

The quality of our Killarneys, white and pink, is as good as the most critical buyer could ask—we never handled better, and we always handle the best. A big crop just right for Easter.

BEAUTIES

We shall have a good crop of Beauties, all lengths, for Easter. We want your regular orders for Beauties, as we always have a good supply of these.

Budlong's New Store.

April 3 J. A. Budlong opened for business in the new store at 82 to 86 East Randolph street. A new ice-box 9x20 feet and eight feet high had been installed, with new tabling and nicely equipped offices. The Budlong establishment occupies the west half of the room and after May 1 Sinner Bros., M. C. Gunterberg, Mrs. Beu and Hunt Bros. will occupy the east half. The room has an all glass front, with three entrances, and is in every way excellently adapted to the needs of the wholesale cut flower business. On the opening day there were a large number of visitors other than the regular customers.

Various Notes.

Tim Matchen says Ivory is about to say adieu—since White Killarney came in no one wants the white sport of Gate, and Peter Reinberg, who is about the only one growing it in any quantity, will drop it after this season.

Paul Rieth & Co., Downers Grove, have flowered a fine batch of geraniums for Easter.

Harry Rowe is preparing to hold an Easter opening. It is the first time he has had the advantage of a conservatory in handling the Easter rush.

The Florists' Club will hold its monthly meeting at the Union restaurant to-night, April 6. President Philpott is in town. Several new members are to be elected and there will be reports on the Boston show.

John Kruchten spent April 5 at Deerfield, Ill., where the gardenias come from.

Word has been received by the E. C. Amling Co. that the president of the corporation left Orange, Cal., for home April 1 and is due here over the northern route April 7.

W. L. Palinsky has decided to sell his branch store at 2541 California avenue.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. was first in the market this season with Spanish iris.

E. B. Washburn has been on the sick list for several days.

Zech & Mann were first in the market with fancy long antirrhinums and say they have been an excellent seller.

Robert Northam, who has charge of George Reinberg's store, says the cold weather has been much to the advantage of the rose crops. He predicts a bad shortage of ferns before the southern stock is ready.

The Hubert Bulb Co., Portsmouth, Va., is steadily increasing its shipments of jonquils to C. W. McKellar, who says he expects the crop to be at its height for Easter.

At E. H. Hunt's, C. M. Dickinson says the supply business is the heaviest yet known for Easter.

Weiland & Risch say conditions are shaping themselves so that there will be no question of Easter supplies.

Harry Manheim says March business with Hoerber Bros. was ahead of a year ago in spite of the fact that Easter fell in the month in 1910. Of course they have considerable additional glass to help the total of sales.

When P. N. Obertin, of Kenosha, was seen at Kyle & Foerster's April 3, he said that business is excellent in the Wisconsin city and that a big spring is in sight.

At Winterson's Seed Store it is said the change in the weather has shut off the counter trade, which early last week had begun to assume the proportions of a rush.

Vaughan & Sperry say that Easter inquiries and orders began to arrive freely with the mail of April 3.

Frank Johnson made a flying trip to Boston for the National Flower Show. He took the Lake Shore's 18-hour train going east March 29, spent Thursday and Friday at the show, Saturday in New York, and was back at his desk Monday morning, having made the return journey on the Pennsylvania's 18-hour flyer. Carl Thomas has returned to his home at West Springfield, Pa. A. L. Randall is doing jury duty.

Wietor Bros. believe in taking time by the forelock. Several of their Beauty houses had been replanted before the end of March.

The rooms in the Atlas block to be occupied by D. Freres, Hertha V. Toner and the Chicago Carnation Co. are vacant and orders have been given for their fitting up in first-class style for the wholesale florists.

There have been more than the usual number of visitors this week. Among them were: J. A. Pettigrew, Boston; P. N. Obertin, Kenosha, Wis.; P. M. Paley, Little Rock, Ark.; Mr. Kemp, Newark, O.; Gust. Frederickson, St. Joe, Mich.; Edward Amerpohl and his foreman, Racine, Wis.; J. F. Wilcox, Mrs. Wilcox and their sons, of Council Bluffs, returning from Boston; G. F. Crabb, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Peter Reinberg is receiving a flood of congratulations. He was campaign manager for Carter Harrison, who was elected mayor April 4.

Bowling.

The Market.

The market last week was all that could be desired by the retailers, as there was plenty of stock at reasonable prices, and in some cases in large lots at the buyer's own price; this was especially the case with carnations, sweet peas and tulips. Lilies were in good demand, with callas in greater supply than Harrisii. Fancy long Beauties were scarce, with some demand, but shorts were plentiful. For other roses there was a good demand and the consignments were large. Some extra fine Brides and Maids are now in the market, but Killarney and White Killarney have the call. Good Richmond and Ivory are also handled.

Ferns are becoming scarce and the price is up to $3 per thousand. All other greens are plentiful.

Monday, April 3, the market opened well, the wholesalers cleaning up pretty well in everything. There was some advance in prices over last week, but stock will be more abundant by the end of the week, with prices down a cent or two.

Various Notes.

Our Boston representatives have returned home and report a great show, a splendid time and royal treatment from the Boston florists.

In the local city bowling tournament, which is now being rolled, three florists' bowling teams are entered, namely, Ostertag Bros., Ryan Florists and Grimm & Gorly. Carl Beyer and C. A. Kuehn rolled in the single events last week and made good scores.

W. H. Kennedy, of Chicago, representing the American Paper Box Co., called on the trade last week.

The Paris Floral Co., under the management of F. J. Foster and young Fred Foster, has completed improvements which give it the much needed extra room. They are making extensive window displays.

Alex. P. Geranios, head of the Metropolitan Floral Co., says the month of March was a good one with them. Nothing but the best quality of stock is handled by them.

A. G. Greiner came near losing his right hand by a bad case of blood poisoning caused by a scratch of a nail in the harness of a horse, but is now on the road to recovery. It came at a bad time, when he was quite busy.

The Kohr Floral Co., of South Broadway, has opened a branch store on South Grand avenue, in the new Turner hall building. Mr. Kohr thinks it a better location than the old one.

The Retail Florists' Association held its monthly meeting April 3, in the Knights of Columbus hall. President Sanders presided and the attendance was large.

The Grand Leader, one of our largest department stores, advertises that it will sell 200,000 catalpa trees for 1 cent each. These will be offered to the school children, to make the celebration of Arbor day the most successful the city has yet had. The sale began April 3.

The Ladies' Home Circle held its regular monthly meeting Monday afternoon, April 3, in the new Langen building, at the corner of Delmar and Euclid avenues. After the meeting the ladies retired to the bowling alleys in the building for refreshments and bowling.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The cut flower situation is fairly satisfactory for the season. Cool weather has kept the supply from increasing too fast and has enabled the growers to maintain and even improve the quality, while the demand, most important of all, is fair. Under these conditions prices are good for the season, though never approaching fancy, except on Beauties and dark cattleyas. Single violets from the winter-blooming plants in heated houses are about done with; the flowers from cold houses and frames are in prospect. Double violets are in fair supply and promise well for Easter. Carnations are fine; at times they are in excess of the demand. Some magnificent sweet peas are coming into town, with promise of big crops soon. Roses, too, are excellent and plentiful, barring Beauties. Snapdragons are of more consequence, though they sell cheaply. Lilac is active and abundant. Daffodils have slackened in anticipation of the southern army, which has been a disappointment so far, owing probably to the unusual cold for April. The balance of the flower list receives fair attention, except daisies and light orchids. Double Killarney, used until now for propagating, has made its appearance among the roses.

A Retail Grower's Easter Plants.

We were all retail growers a few years ago, before the days of those wonderfully successful men, the wholesale commission florists. We produced what we thought we could sell in our immediate neighborhood and then went running around among each other to dispose of the surplus. Of course those of us in the best locations, opposite a good live cemetery, did well, while the rest of us had a hard time. Then came the days of centralization. The fashionable florists in the heart of the city made greater and greater demands on our resources, and to their aid came the wholesalers. But the retail grower in a populous suburb is still one of the most important factors floriculturally. He feels the pulse of the flower-loving public with a more human knowledge of its needs than any other. What he grows for Easter is of especial interest.

William Berger has erected five well equipped greenhouses in the rear of his handsome new store on Germantown avenue north of School lane. They are filled with a carefully chosen and well grown lot of Easter and spring plants. The Easter plants show a preference for medium sizes and for bright colors. The leaders are azaleas, rhododendrons, genistas, hydrangeas, daisies in white and yellow, lilies and frame after frame full of tulips, daffodils and hyacinths.

A feature of the houses is the sweet peas, bench-grown for May blooming, pot-grown for outside planting to cut for June commencements. The remainder of the place is filled with decorative, blooming and soft-wood plants for bedding out, all showing careful culture.

Charles Mecky's Easter Plants.

Charles Mecky has one of the prettiest lots of Easter plants, at his place on Limekiln pike, east of Cheltenham avenue, that one could wish to see. There are just three varieties, genistas, hydrangeas and daisies. But any one of the three is worth a trip to see. You want to know why? Because each one is perfectly grown. The genistas are hard as nails, the daisies look like a field in bloom, stocky and evenly flowered, each like the other, shapely, while the hydrangeas were a revelation to me. There are 8,000 of them, in 6-inch pots, as even as the daisies, which is saying a good deal, three to four flowers each and beautifully timed. The point about those hydrangeas that was most surprising was that though grown on side tables, that is in houses with center walk only, the back plant next to the gutter was like the front plant next to the walk. When you consider that there were six plants in each row on a 4-foot table that is saying a great deal. Mr. Mecky himself does all the watering on these Easter plants and I doubt whether there are many of us who could water them as well, or nearly as well. The balance of the place is filled with well grown roses, in charge of William Mecky, and of geraniums and other spring plants.

Otaksa grown pink is the only hydrangea forced. Mr. Mecky believes blue will not take so surely as pink. The uniformity of his plants is attributable to the careful selection of the cuttings and the attention given them. They are now in 2¼-inch pots for next season's blooming and will be brought on slowly into 6-inch, the popular flowering size. The white daisies are mainly Chrysanthemum frutescens, so well grown that one would not miss Queen Alexandra were not a few grown for variety's sake. Mr. Mecky says that while the flowers of Queen Alexandra are larger, this variety does not bloom freely enough to make the effect of the older sort. A thousand plants must be grown to get a hundred covered with bloom at once, while with Chrysanthemum frutescens nearly all come into flower at the same time. A sport from this last named variety is pleasing, compact in habit, with small leaves, but not so good a keeper. The yellow daisy, Etoile d'Or, I think, is grown in smaller numbers. It is more difficult of culture, sometimes coming blind despite great care.

Passing over the roses, grown without heat, and the 50,000 geraniums and other soft-wooded plants for the present, I close with a brief account of the proprietor of the place, one of our successful growers.

Charles Mecky came to Philadelphia from Germany in 1873, when a lad of 19. He was then a competent florist and obtained a position at Girard College under the late George Huster, who had become head gardener the year before.

After one year's work Mr. Mecky was advanced from the lowest of the fourteen men on the college grounds to the highest position under the head gardener. Mr. Huster was so pleased with the lad's industry and ability that he prophesied he would one day be his successor. In 1882 Mr. Mecky asked for an increase in salary that would be considered trivial today. The trustees delayed so long that with Mr. Huster's help he took a small place in Kensington. When too late the college trustees offered the advance asked. Mr. Mecky moved to Seventh street and Erie avenue in 1885, where he remained for twenty-one years, until the growing city drove him farther north. He grew standard plants in popular sizes at popular prices for the wholesale market, and he prospered. Novelties and expensive stock were avoided. Roses at a quarter in 6-inch pots and geraniums at $7 per hundred in 4½-inch pots were his mainstays. They were good and people wanted them. Five years ago Mr. Mecky moved to his present location, which is well adapted to his requirements.

Emil A. Wohler, of Bala, Pa., spoke before the Florists' Club April 4 on "Planting." Those present who had attended the National Flower Show were enthusiastic in their praise of its beauties.

The terrific storm of March 27, approaching a tornado in its violence, left havoc behind that was not at first generally known. West Chester suffered severe loss. Joseph Kift & Son estimated that they had 3,000 panes of glass broken and much valuable stock underneath them cut and chilled. Walter McCoy lost 300 panes, with stock under them injured. Isaac A.

Passmore lost 300 panes and many tomato plants were cut and ruined by the falling glass. The Chester County Home lost glass in the greenhouses. Samuel W. Lewis, who has taken the greenhouses of Max Meyer, estimates his loss at 500 panes.

John W. McIntyre promises plenty of fine lilacs for Easter.

The sweet pea growers all go to Clifton and to Cliftondale these days.

Fred Ehret has been busy.

Leo Niessen promises plenty of carnations and valley for Easter.

Edward Riley is on duty again.

W. H. Hausell has taken the place of William C. Smith at Sixty-first and Market streets.

Berger Bros. are receiving superb sweet peas.

daily as Easter approaches. Already the plantsmen have their orders booked and their selected stock is sold. Medium priced plants have the call.

There is an abundance of everything in the cut flower line, with an indigestible surplus of violets and southern daffodils. If there is any shortage it is in the highest grade of American Beauty roses. The clean-up the last of the week was not complete in either violets or carnations and the street on Monday, April 3, was flooded with them. The usual education of the public goes on at the flower departments of the big dry goods stores, and it is difficult to find anything missing there in plant or flower, fruit tree, bulb or seed.

Plenty of roses are arriving, Killarney predominating and apparently losing none of its popularity. The new kinds come in slowly and are snapped up by the leading stores for window attractions. It is hard to lift the value of carnations, with so many arriving. Some grand stock sold under 2 cents April 1. In quality they have never been excelled. There is the promise of a good supply for Easter, but the day of high prices is past and because of this cut flowers will again take their legitimate place in public patronage.

Enormous shipments of violets are arriving. The street is the only relief for the gorged market. There they sell at 15 cents a bunch and every corner of the big city is blue with them. These, with valley, daffodils and roses, make up the attractively displayed offerings of the street men.

There will be a wide call for orchids for Easter and the promise is for a sufficiency; all the wholesalers are handling them in quantity. The abundance of bulbous stock of all kinds makes the disposal of tulips and daffodils especially difficult.

Retailers generally are optimistic and are buying as heavily as usual. Stock, weather and revival of general business combine to stimulate the courage and enterprise of the florists in every department of the trade. The streets in the downtown district are already displaying hardy roses, fruit trees, vines, shrubs, and everything the suburbanite desires. The seedsmen are busy night and day, the auctions are crowded with buyers, and prices are satisfactory.

Various Notes.

The New Yorkers are all back from the Boston show and without exception the verdict is that it was "the greatest show on earth."

The New York Florists' Club will hold its monthly meeting April 10. There will be special exhibits, many echoes of the flower show, a spring lunch and a stereopticon lecture by SCALE ON ELMS.

I am sending you a branch of an elm tree. What is the matter with it and how can the trouble be overcome?

S. C. C.

The portions of branches forwarded were almost completely crusted with scurfy scale. While less destructive than the San Jose scale, which attacks apples, pears, peaches, plums, hawthorns, Japanese quince, many roses, lilacs, poplars, willows, oranges and quite a variety of other trees and shrubs, the scurfy scale, like the oyster shell variety, will kill out entire branches and trees if not destroyed. To kill the scale, spraying must be done while the trees are dormant. You must either use the lime-sulphur solution, which you can purchase ready made or prepare yourself, or one of the various oil solutions, such as Scalecide. Probably one of the soluble oils would be the easiest for you to apply. Use a barrel pump mounted on an express wagon; if the trees are large, climbing will be necessary. The scale will be found principally on the young, smooth wood. Use a nozzle which throws a fine, misty spray, and be sure to moisten every portion of the wood, as any scales left breed with incredible rapidity.

This spraying cannot be done except when the trees are dormant, as the strength needed to kill the scale would also destroy all the foliage. It would be well to examine other trees and shrubs, especially some of those I have mentioned, which are also liable to have scale upon them. In the case of small or medium sized trees or shrubs found badly attacked, the best remedy is to pull them up and burn them. C. W.

Portland, Ore.—It is said that the Martin & Forbes Co., after using a Buick motor truck for delivery purposes for about six months, has pronounced the experiment a decided success, as the auto car is not only more serviceable than wagons and messengers, but also less expensive in the end.

Clifton Forge, Va.—O. C. Ports, who purchased a 20-acre tract of land here a few months ago, now has the establishment about ready for operation and will conduct business under the name of O. C. Ports & Son. He has completed one greenhouse and has also erected a residence, a poultry house and a barn.

Seven Pages of Retailers' Cards

This department for the cards of Leading Retail Florists—those florists who have the facilities for filling the orders sent them by other florists—has made possible the recent rapid development of this branch of the business, a branch of the trade now established for all time and so helpful that its volume will keep on increasing for many years.

Are you sending and receiving your share of these orders? You can send your share (and make 20 per cent profit without effort) if you let your customers know you can perform this service for them. To receive your share—well, The Review's department for Retailers' cards remains the one way of getting prompt action on the order in hand. If you are the only florist in your city represented here, you get the orders coming into your territory from other florists. If you are not represented and "the other fellow" is—we can leave it to you what becomes of these desirable orders.

To be represented costs only 70 cents per week on a yearly order. This is for one-inch space. Other spaces in proportion.

Why not send your order today—now—before you forget it?

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Market.

A visit to the different flower stores and the flower market finds them well supplied with all the different spring flowers. In almost everything there is more stock than is required. Trade has been rather light, the greatest call being for funeral work, with the demand for social entertainments not so large as during the early winter months.

The weather has been cold for the last ten days, which did a great deal toward holding the bulk stock back for Easter. The previous hot weather advanced them so far that a number of florists thought they could not hold stock till Easter. The indications are that Easter lilies will be abundant this year, as plenty of fine plants are to be seen.

Beauties are still poor. Bride, Maid, Killarney, Richmond and My Maryland are of good quality, and more than enough to go around. Stock of all kinds is abundant for the amount of business, with the exception of green goods, which are a little short.

Various Notes.

W. W. Coles was in the city last week, attending the ceremonial of the Shriners and visiting the different florists. He has just returned from a three months' visit in Texas and the southern states. He is much taken with Texas and would like to locate there permanently.

William Langstaff, who has been ill for some time, is again able to be about.

E. A. Nelson has purchased two more delivery wagons. Mrs. Nelson, who has been seriously ill, is much improved.

Mr. Nims, with the A. H. Hews Pottery Co., was a caller last week. He reaches the city only twice a year, but has many customers here.

John Heidenreich has a fine lot of lilies, cinerarias, azaleas and other blooming plants for Easter.

Edgar Stewart, of Anderson, spent a few days in the city last week.

Homer Wiegand has been laid up with the grip for the last week.

A. F. J. Baur, Irwin Bertermann and Henry Rieman were among the Indianapolis florists who attended the flower show last week.

PROVIDENCE.

The Market.

Business last week was confined almost entirely to funeral work, but of this there was considerable and of a better quality than usual. No social functions of any description assisted in brightening the conditions. The dearth of business, however, was not so much noticed as might have been the case at almost any other time. With the preparations for the Easter trade and the National Flower Show at Boston, the week passed swiftly and few realized business conditions. From all sides come encouraging reports as to the quantity and quality of stock of all kinds for Easter, and already the vanguard has made its appearance.

Visitors to Boston.

Seldom has there been a more general response to any invitation than to the one issued by the Florists' and Gardeners' Club of Rhode Island for a visit to the National Flower Show at Boston, March 28. The party was announced to leave here at 9 o'clock, and at that time more than a score assembled for the trip. All returned fully repaid and several made second trips during the week. Among those who attended the show were Robert Johnston, Albert Holscher, Michael Sweeney, Charles H. Hunt, Eugene Appleton, Frank E. Saunders, J. Frank Schellinger, Robert Van Meter and wife, Frederick Hoffman, David McCoid, Cornelius Hartstra, John Burke, Edward J. Johnston, James F. Jordan and son, Lawrence Hay, Nathan D. Pierce,

Various Notes.

O. H. Williams is preparing to re-build three of his greenhouses on Hart-ford avenue this spring.

Albert Holscher was a heavy buyer at the flower show. Among his pur-chases were 7,500 lily of the valley roots.

Richard J. Taylor, of East Green-wich, was the victim of a peculiar acci-dent a few days ago. He was at work repairing one of his houses, when he stepped on a nail in an old board. The nail penetrated his shoe and inflicted a painful wound. As he attempted to step back so as to pull the nail from the foot he stepped with his other foot upon another nail, inflicting a similar wound.

Seed Trade News.AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., E. L. Page, Greene, N. Y.; First Vice-pres., L. H. Vaughan, Chicago; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. Twenty-ninth annual meeting, June 20 to 22, 1911.

ONION sets are acting even worse this year than last.

COUNTER trade is lackadaisical—sales and sap go up at about the same time and the weather thus far is too cold for a real start.

THE Iowa bill giving to seedsmen the right to sell insecticides, for many years a monopoly with the pharmacists, has become a law.

IN the list of the contributors to the campaign fund of Charles E. Merriam, who was not elected mayor of Chicago April 4, appears the name of Charles Dickinson with $1,100 set opposite.

WHILE the peak of the mail order seed season is passed, there remains a large volume of business to be done; the weather has been unfavorable for weeks over a large section of the country.

A REPORT from Denver states that the Barteldes Seed Co. has joined the ranks of the corporations. The capital is $300,000, and the incorporators are F. W. Barteldes, Max Wilhelmi and Jeannet Uhrlaub.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture March 27 issued a bulletin entitled "The Home Production of Onion Seed and Sets," by W. R. Beattie, of the Bureau of Plant Industry. It gives an account of the methods employed in the trade for the production of both seeds and sets.

TAKING the three months of the seed season, January, February and March, the record to date with most of the mail order houses stands about on a par with last year. There would be no cause for complaint except that, of course, an increase had been hoped for and many seeds cost more this season, so that the general margin of profit is not so good.

THE latter part of March brought the catalog houses an excellent run of mail orders, and the month as a whole made a fair record, although the older houses are not able to report anything out of the ordinary in number or size of orders. The many young concerns that are pushing into the trade in more or less local territory are, most of them, making good progress and have apparently absorbed this season a considerable part of the natural increase in the demand for seeds.

THE NEW CHAIRMAN.

With Congress again in session, the democrats have control of the House and Hon. James R. Mann, while rated as one of the strongest men in that branch of the government, loses a large part of his power with the succession of William C. Adamson, of Georgia, to the chairmanship of the Committee on

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND

Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Mr. Adamson was a member of the committee during Mr. Mann's chairmanship. He has attended the hearings given the seed trade and has a good grasp on the subject of pure seed legislation. That Mr. Adamson does not take the matter so seriously as does Mr. Mann, but that he nevertheless expects to see progress along the lines of recent restrictive legislation, is shown by his reply to Kirby B. White, of Ferry & Co., at the hearing of February 2:

Mr. White: "Is Congress ready to embark on the field of federal regulation with regard to saying that the purchaser of every 5-cent packet of seeds, or every $2 pair of shoes, or every ice cream freezer, or anything of that kind, shall get his money's worth?"

Mr. Adamson: "We have already entered upon it, and in less than twenty-five years they will trim the corns and toe nails and name the babies."

DODGING THE DUTIES?

Congressman James R. Mann, who is not from Missouri, but who nevertheless has to be shown, harbors a new suspicion of wrongdoing against the seed trade—he fears dutiable seeds may be escaping the payment of duty because of similarity of appearance of seeds that are on the free list. Pursuing investigation along this line, he and Kirby B. White, of D. M. Ferry & Co., had the following dialogue at the recent hearing on pure seed bills at Washington:

Mr. Mann. Can you tell sugar-beet seed from garden-beet seed?

Mr. White. No, sir.

Mr. Mann. Can you tell mangel-wurzel seed from garden-beet seed?

Mr. White. I am not a seed expert; I do not know whether they can be distinguished, but I can not tell them.

Mr. Mann. You say you are not a seed expert. I supposed you were here as a seed expert.

Mr. White. I have been engaged in the seed business for seventeen years, and of necessity any business is diversified and requires specialization, and my specialization has not been along the line of determining from the appearance of the seed what that variety is.

Mr. Mann. But you come as an expert and tell us that you can not mix weed seed with garden seed, that you can not tell the varieties of garden seed, and that it is impossible to tell the viability.

Mr. White. I have told the things which I knew.

Mr. Mann. Are you an expert on those three things?

Mr. White. So far as the statements I have made here are concerned, I know they are true. More than that, I make no claim to be an expert.

Mr. Mann. Is the trade able to distinguish the difference between a mangel-wurzel seed and a garden-beet seed?

Mr. White. So far as I am concerned, I can not. I do not know what the rest of the trade can do. I can refer you to some other seedsmen here who can answer that.

Mr. Mann. You know, there is a tariff of 4 cents a pound on garden-beet seed, and no tariff on mangel-wurzel seed or sugar-beet seed.

Mr. White. That is quite true.

Mr. Mann. Do you think there is any garden-beet seed imported into the country as sugar-beet seed?

Mr. White. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Mann. Do you think there is any?

Mr. White. I do not.

Mr. Mann. Do you think there is any way of determining whether there is or not, so far as the custom-house is concerned?

Mr. White. If the seeds are not distinguishable by the appearance, I do not see how there is any way.

Mr. Mann. You know there is a tariff of 8 cents a pound on kale seed, and no tariff on — seed; can the trade distinguish the difference by the appearance of the seeds?

Mr. White. Not so far as I know.

Mr. Mann. There is a tariff of 4 cents a pound on turnip seed, but no tariff on mustard seed; can they be distinguished by the appearance?

Mr. White. Not so far as I know.

Mr. Kennedy. They can by taste, can they not?

Mr. White. They might distinguish mustard, but the other seeds are so nearly alike that I do not believe they could distinguish them.

PROPOSED ENGLISH SEED LAW.

A bill has been introduced in the English House of Commons to amend the existing seed law along the lines of the seed legislation American seedsmen have been fighting so strenuously the last few years. It is evidently the intention to make purity and germination the principal if not the only object of the proposed tests, and to set up an artificial standard of purity and germination, with penalties, by exposure and otherwise, upon the seller in cases where this standard is not reached.

"No one who knows anything whatever of the seed trade," says the Horticultural Advertiser (British), in commenting on the bill, "needs to be told that germinating power is largely a matter of climatic conditions beyond human control, and what is much more important, that the percentage of germination is, in many cases, far less important to the buyer than that the seed should be true to type. Many highly bred strains of seed do not show a high percentage of germination, but the buyer would vastly prefer to have

NOVELTIES

We take this opportunity to announce to the American nursery trade that we are big growers of novelties in Roses.

We buy every year all the novelties which appear anywhere in the world. We propagate all the varieties of the sets during the first year they are in our possession; we study them and offer in our Wholesale Catalogue of Nursery Stocks and Roses those that we have noted as among the best.

We continue to propagate and study them as novelties during three years, and afterwards transfer the very best into our general collection.

Owing to the great attention that we devote to this culture and the importance of our collection of Roses, an inspection of our nurseries in summer will be of great interest and profit for our American colleagues when on a trip in Europe.

Our Wholesale Catalogue of Roses and Nursery Stocks will be sent on demand.

them and a crop which will answer his purpose, than take an inferior strain with a higher germinating power."

In discussing the matter, Pennell & Sons, the well-known growers at Lincoln, say:

"Lincolnshire is a large seed-producing county, exporting great quantities of certain seeds to several parts of the globe, and in consequence is vitally interested in this question. We do not think the promoters of this bill fully realize that they may do considerable damage to the farmer and seed grower without benefiting anyone in a corresponding degree. Agricultural seed is not a manufactured article; the seedsman cleans it and deals in it, but he does not make it. He has to receive it from the grower, and Lincolnshire seed is frequently of lower germination than seed grown in the south and seed grown abroad, yet it has a genuine character and a vigor of constitution which is much appreciated by consumers. The effect of a rigid standard of germination would be that in seven seasons out of ten Lincolnshire seed would be barred altogether, and would be unsalable.

"It makes no difference to the seedsmen whether he procures the seed he sells from farmers in England or whether he procures it from abroad, and if he is driven to supply only seed of the highest germination he will be compelled to deal in foreign seed, to the detriment of the home trade and the home producer.

"Moreover, the germination test is most misleading; many foreign seeds of high germination produce in England, and Lincolnshire especially, only a very poor, weak crop.

"The promoters of the bill can know little about the subject, as they ask that vegetable seeds shall be sold subject to analysis for impurities. Now, the word is never heard in connection with vegetable seeds, and no analysts in this country or in any other have received samples of vegetable seeds for analysis. The reason of this is that the seed grower gathers these seeds by hand in small quantities and leaves any weed seeds or other impurities behind. Any legislation in this direction is therefore quite unnecessary. As regards root seeds, also, few complaints are ever made in regard to impurities, and it would be a ridiculous provision. Root seeds are valued according to their stock, pedigree and genuineness, or ability to produce good crops, rather than upon their germination and purity."

In buying lily bulbs do you invest or do you speculate? The safest plan, of course, is to invest, and that means to pay the price and get the very best the market affords. The speculation plan is to buy the cheapest you can and take a chance. Now if it was only a mere speculation in bulbs, the risk would not be so great, but the real danger in handling bad bulbs is the loss of valuable space in the greenhouse and the profit on the sale of cut flowers. Of course, an investment is not always absolutely safe, but in the long run it is much safer than a speculation, and every experienced grower of lilies knows that the best bulbs are absolutely necessary for successful results and profitable returns. If you knew what we know about Horseshoe Brand Giganteum of superior quality and assortment, no one could induce you to buy other brands. There are positively no better lily bulbs produced in the world, and they are as safe an investment as you can possibly make in lily bulbs.

Prices reasonable for quality delivered. Try them.

WHITE FLY ON TOMATOES.

We have planted our range of forcing houses to tomatoes, with lettuce between the tomatoes. The tomatoes are affected with white fly. Would one ounce of cyanide of potassium to 1,000 cubic feet injure the lettuce or the young tomatoes? Our houses are new and quite tight. H. F.

You can exterminate the white fly with cyanide without injuring either crop, and that is the only way to get rid of the pest. You must be careful, however, not to make the cyanide too strong, or it will hurt the tomatoes. One ounce to 1,000 cubic feet would be too strong to risk. The cyanide acts somewhat differently at different times, depending on the length of time the acid and water have been mixed before using, and also depending on how dry the house is. In using gas you must have the plants perfectly dry, and it is better if the soil is not watered that day, as the poison settles quickly in moisture, burning the foliage, but doing little harm to the insects.

White fly is easy to kill with cyanide, and only light doses are required. This method of fumigating is easier than any other, once you become accustomed to it. I have just fumigated a house 25x200 feet and seven feet to the gutters. In this house I used only eight jars, with 2-ounce doses of cyanide per jar. This house would average ten feet to the ridge, making 250 cubic feet of space per lineal foot of house. So, you see, the fumigation was not strong, but it killed the white fly and did not injure the tomatoes. I have used only six jars to this house at times, with equally good results.

Start with a weak dose and, if it does not get them all, give it another the following night. You will need one later, also, to catch the young that are now in the eggs. Mix the acid and water in the jars about one hour before putting in the cyanide. Commencing at the farther end of the house, drop the packages carefully, paper and all, in the jars as you pass them. Then stay out of the house until toward daylight; by that time it will be perfectly safe to enter, although the odor will still be plainly noticed. H. G.

PACIFIC COAST.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

Business last week showed a decided general improvement. With the advance of spring weather the supply of flowers is more varied, yet we have to handle more business to get the same monetary results. Sundays are usually the best days, as there are more funerals, and also more flowers taken to the cemeteries.

Carnations are in full crop of finest quality. Roses are also improving under the spring-like conditions. All other stock is responding accordingly and it keeps the florist busy to keep it moving at a profit. Uneasiness is felt by some, as they fear that the lilies will be too far advanced for Easter. Shifting to cooler houses will have to be done, in order to have them at the appointed time.

Fruit trees are in full bloom and come in handy for decorations and window effects.

Various Notes.

It is reported that Martin & Forbes have purchased forty acres of land in the vicinity of Forest Grove and in the near future will erect a new plant on the property. E. R. C.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Everything is lovely in the vicinity of San Francisco, with the possible exception of business, and that is no worse than it always is during the lenten season. Flowers of every description are in oversupply and the prices are, in consequence, nothing to brag of. It seems as if the thousands of carnations and roses are trying to make up for the many weeks during January and February when they did not nearly pay for their board and lodging.

From all accounts at hand, we are to have plenty of stock for Easter at fair prices. Easter lilies are coming into town in fair quantities and of good quality. They cost the stores from $2.50 to $4 per dozen stems, while the potted plants will average about double those prices. Carnations and roses are a glut now, but this condition will change in a few weeks, when the big crop will be off for the time. Daffodils and tulips are in abundant supply and move fairly well. Dutch hyacinths and valley can be placed in the same category. Violets are rapidly nearing their end and are not of as good quality as they have been. Narcissus poeticus sells well. Snowdrops, forget-me-nots, wild poppies and other seasonable stock are now plentiful enough to become a factor in the spring sales.

Various Notes.

The Sievers & Cornwell Co. is remodeling the Powell street store and at present is filling all orders from the stand in the California market.

The Sign of the Rose is the name under which a new establishment will open on Powell and Market streets, in the Flood building.

The government is erecting a large conservatory at the Presidio, on the vacant ground in the rear of the general hospital.

The H. M. Sanborn Co., of Oakland, will remove to the Delger block, on Broadway between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, about May 1.

The town of San Rafael will hold a rose festival April 29. G.

TREE PLANTING BY FLORISTS.

we have to confine ourselves to nut and fruit trees; not at all—shade trees will do!

And how would you feel if you were contributing to a "Tree Preservation" scheme? Wouldn't you swell with pride if you knew that partly through your personal efforts the trees in your home town were being saved? It is a downright disgrace the way the trees in some localities are permitted to go to ruin. My own town has its drawbacks in this respect, but we are doing what we can. Look at the great and efficient work Mr. Prost is doing in Chicago. Of course, Chicago has more money to spend than some of the smaller towns, but some of our interested brethren could volunteer and work for nothing. Some people, though, always think they must be paid every time they turn around. Public-spirited men don't—that's the difference.

Why not speak to your friends, call a mass-meeting of the citizens interested, and offer to advise wherever possible? Call for contributions to pay men to do the actual labor. There is no need to give any reasons for saving the trees, or to mention any of the pests—both human and otherwise—that work their destruction. The more one says regarding this subject the more one wants to say. We've simply got to keep hammering away to bring results.

Educating the School Children.

I presume it would mean disaster if we men, as a body, were to issue bulletins or circulars from time to time giving information to the school children on all phases of plant culture. Do any of you think it would stir the home decoration spirit? For instance, what do the great mass of people know about plants and their culture? Some have wonderful success, but don't know why; they are simply lucky. One day a lady asked me what to do with her palm to make it grow. I asked her how it looked—whether the leaves had a good color or were turning yellow. Then she began. She said the plant was "simply grand," that the leaves were a deep, glossy green, and that she had never seen a better specimen. I told her she had doubtless learned the secret of caring for her particular palm, so she had better continue as formerly. Then she wanted to know if milk wouldn't improve it! This is only one little incident. You have all met with them hundreds of times.

Couldn't we reach people through the school children? I know we could. Why couldn't each florists' club offer its active support to the city authorities and also to the school directors? Money would be found in some way to publish the necessary information. The florist would be benefited, and so would the people. Isn't it worth a thought?

Now, don't think, fellows, that I intend to spout all through the columns of this excellent paper, because I do not. I simply want you to have something to think about aside from your business. Some of you old-timers think you live simply to earn the big iron dollar for yourself. Come out of it and do something for your neighbor occasionally. You'll feel better. You'll work better.

This is a dear old world—if we but knew it. F. K. B.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYIMEN.

Officers for 1910-11: Pres., W. P. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; Vice-pres., E. S. Welch, Shenandoah, Ia.; Sec'y, John Hall Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-sixth annual meeting, St. Louis, June, 1911.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture March 27 issued a pamphlet entitled "Spraying Peaches for the Control of Brown-rot, Scab and Curculio," by W. M. Scott and A. L. Quaintance.

SCALE ON SYCAMORES.

Will you please tell me what to do for my sycamores. They are full of scale. I have several of them and they are thick with this scale. E. B.

The shoots forwarded were covered with oyster-shell scale. You must get rid of this or it will soon kill your trees. Spray thoroughly with either the lime-sulphur solution or one of the oil solutions, of which there are a number on the market. Be sure to damp every portion of wood infested with scale. To do this you must use a nozzle that throws a fine, misty spray. Do the work now, while the trees are dormant, as the foliage would not withstand spraying with a solution of sufficient strength to kill the scale. C. W.

ROOTING ROSE CUTTINGS.

Please tell me when to put out rose cuttings, and how to treat them in order to root them successfully in this Georgia climate. G. S. C.

Cuttings from hard wood should have been planted before this date. If the scions are dormant, types like the Prairies, Wichuraianas and rambles may be planted now, but without hope of any great success. It takes from two to three months for cuttings to root in the field, and therefore top growth will have started before root action can begin, owing to the warm weather which now prevails. If planted in beds, properly shaded and watered, a greater per cent would live, but at this date the risk would be hazardous.

Hard-wood cuttings should be taken in the fall, as soon as sap action suspends, following several sharp frosts if possible—about November 20. Use the current season's growth. The cuttings should be about eight inches long, using only such wood as is firm and thoroughly mature. If the plantings are small, a good grafting knife will do the work; if large, a French pruning shears is by long odds the best implement. This shears makes a clean, sharp cut and does not tire the operator. Tie the cuttings into bundles of 100. Plant as soon as made, into well drained, sandy loam, in rows forty-two inches apart and with four inches of separation in the row, if for field cultivation; if for beds, these should be six feet wide, with the rows eight inches apart by two inches in the row. Leave only the top bud exposed when well firmed in the ground. It is usually best to bed the rows, as that affords better drainage during periods of heavy rainfall.

Should frost lift the cuttings before they root, they should be pushed down to firm ground. This, however, may be done but once—just before the cuttings begin to root. Some growers cover the cuttings entirely when planted in the fall, but unless they are uncovered just at the right time the following spring many cuttings are lost.

THE BERCKMANS BUSINESS.

Referring to an item which recently has gone the rounds of the press, stating that the property on which the nursery is conducted has passed to P. J. Berckmans' widow by deed of gift, P. J. Berckmans Co. makes the following statement:

"The business of the Fruitland Nursery is conducted by a corporation under the well-known name of P. J. Berckmans Co. The entire stock of this corporation is owned or controlled by the late Mr. Berckmans' sons, Louis A., Robert C. and Prosper J. A. Berckmans, Jr. The company conducts its nursery business upon lands leased to it by the late Mr. Berckmans for the entire life of the corporation. Some years ago the late Mr. Berckmans made a deed of gift of a portion of the leased lands to his wife and confirmed this deed by his will, but neither the deed nor the will interfered with the lease.

"The Berckmans nursery business will be conducted as heretofore by the corporation, and at the expiration of its charter life the majority stockholders, consisting of Mr. Berckmans' sons, will continue in the same business, either as a corporation or as individuals. Their father left to them a large tract of land, which in connection with other lands controlled and owned by his sons, will be amply sufficient for the conduct and enlargement of the business heretofore conducted."

ROCHESTER.

The Market.

The retailers report that business during the early part of last week was brisk and satisfactory, but a change in the weather came on Thursday, and on Friday morning Rochester woke up to find four inches of snow on the ground, and a temperature of 26 degrees. At 3 o'clock the mercury reached the highest point for the day, 36 degrees. The unsettled weather in the latter part of the week had a somewhat depressing effect on sales. Saturday business was fair, but hardly up to the usual volume.

Carnations are plentiful, and choice stock is retailing at 50 cents a dozen. Killarney roses are quoted at 75 cents. Violets bring from 25 cents to 50 cents a bunch. Hyacinths, tulips and daffodils bring 25 cents and upward.

Various Notes.

George B. Hart is receiving the congratulations of his friends on the arrival of a daughter at his home on Sunday, March 19.

E. C. Campbell's new retail store, at 17 North street, will be opened for business in a few days. This will be one of the best equipped florists' stores in the city. As a downtown point for distributing flowers and plants of Mr. Campbell's own growing, it should be a success from the start. E. F. R.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Easter plants are already making their appearance in the Cleveland stores and show up well. Inquiries for Easter plants and flowers are coming in early and a large number of orders are already booked.

Cut flowers are plentiful, except good Beauties and Richmonds. The Killarney and My Maryland coming in are exceptionally fine. Violets are not so good as a few weeks ago, but there still is some call for them. Valley is plentiful and in good demand.

Various Notes.

The Jones-Russell Co. reports several weddings booked for after Easter. They had the decorations for the Dell-Meyers wedding last week.

The Flower Club will hold forth at the Bismarck, Friday, April 7.

All the florists attending the Boston flower show returned enthusiastic.

THE BUILDING OF A BUSINESS.

included under this head. Good stock creates demand, necessitating increase in output, demanding more labor, skilled and unskilled, labor-saving machinery, new materials, etc. Thus one may say that the development depends principally upon the demand, which in turn is fostered by necessity. The demands of a growing or rapidly developing business can only be temporarily satisfied. In like proportion do the personal demands increase.

Under the head of integrity would come maintained credit, good will, honest administration, efficient labor, confidence and credit of customers, integrity of purpose.

Locality and Environments.

Locality and environments cover transportation facilities, nearness of markets for certain commodities used extensively, prompt and efficient service to customers, labor requirements, homes, water, soil, manure and coal supplies.

Natural advantages must be taken into serious account when building is contemplated. An unfailing water supply is absolutely necessary. Suitable soil, plenty of it for years to come, must be provided for. Coal must be easy to obtain at fair prices. The markets for the sale of goods must be close at hand. Rapid transportation is desirable at all times, not only for the distributing of stock and to facilitate purchasing, but it is a material aid in providing necessary help. All these various matters require careful working out, and each is an essential cog in the wheel which makes for the successful development of the business.

An up-to-date rose growing establishment includes these individuals in its make-up: Rose growers, steam fitters, painters, teamsters, blacksmiths, firemen, bookkeepers, stenographers, temperature men, engineers, carpenters, glaziers, packers, salesmen, laborers, and what not—and the money to pay for their combined efforts must come from the product, the rose.

POCAHONTAS

If you grow any crimson carnations, then why not grow a variety that will give you quality equal to the best varieties in the other colors? POCAHONTAS will do this, and you will also find it productive enough to be highly profitable.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Everything points to a bumper trade at Easter, although some growers are of the opinion that stock will be a little scarce. There will be few fancy pots of stock sold this year. The growers are not going in much for that. Lilies may be short in supply. A number of the growers will not have them in time.

The retail trade is dull. Design work, however, keeps us out of mischief.

Various Notes.

A. E. Moore, the wholesale florist, has purchased the plant of the Georgetown Floral Co., Georgetown, Ont., and also that of McIntyre & Trimble, on Marjorie avenue, in this city. He has formed a stock company known as the A. E. Moore Floral Co., Ltd., and composed of himself, Samuel Kirk, Wm. Trimble and Jas. McIntyre. This will be a close corporation and no stock will be sold. This move on Mr. Moore's part was necessitated by the scarcity of stock. Often he was unable to meet the demand and finally decided to grow his own stock. His plant at Georgetown consists of six houses 17x250 feet and the one in Toronto of four houses 20x150 feet. These latter will be torn down and moved to Georgetown.

E. A. F.

Adams, Mass.—A. J. Boothman, on North Summer street, recently completed a new greenhouse. The stock in the new house was badly injured by a cold snap which arrived before the heating system was in full operation.

Woodstock, Vt.—Douglas Eccleston, who recently took charge of the greenhouses on the estate of F. S. Mackenzie, has had much practical experience, especially in orchid growing, both in England and America. For a time he was orchid grower and hybridizer for Sander & Sons, St. Albans, England. Since coming to this country he has been for two and a half years orchid grower and assistant gardener for Morton F. Plant, of New London, Conn. In his present position Mr. Mackenzie has charge of one of the best private orchid collections in New England.

Carnation Norwood

This variety has been grown by us for four years and has proven to be the best White Carnation we have ever grown.

NORWOOD is a Pure White, of good form, about 3½ inches in diameter, exceedingly fragrant, never known to split, and a free and continuous bloomer. The most profitable Carnation we have ever grown. An ideal commercial variety. Rooted cuttings (immediate delivery), $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000.

It will pay every Carnation Grower to plant this variety—there's money in it.

The Market.

The weather last week was about as bad as the meanest person could wish. Stock shortened up considerably, but trade held up wonderfully well in the face of wind, rain and snow. This week is not showing any improvement in the weather to date.

Various Notes.

Phipps Conservatory, Schenley park, is busy getting the Easter show in shape and all indications are it will be "the finest ever." The cold weather has enabled them to hold their stock in just the shape they wanted.

Those who attended the big flower show are home, to continue to pour into our ears the stories of all the good things we missed—those sweet peas, roses, fine plants, and everything that was better than they ever saw before.

The telephone has just brought report of the death of William Clory, Coshoc-ton, O., but no particulars.

Albert Pochelon, of the L. Bomb Floral Co., and Robt. M. Rahaley, of the Michigan Cut Flower Co., Detroit, Mich., were visitors, stopping on their way from Boston. Hoo-Hoo.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The Market.

Business remains about the same. Flowers are quite plentiful. Carnations retail at 60 cents and 75 cents per dozen, roses at $1.50 and $2 per dozen, violets at $1 per hundred blooms, sweet peas at $1 per hundred blooms, snapdragons at 75 cents per dozen, callas at $2 per dozen and lilies at $2.50 per dozen. Bulb stock is good. Tulips, daffodils and Paper Whites retail at 50 cents per dozen and double Murillos at 75 cents per dozen. Plant trade remains satisfactory.

Stock for Easter is looking well; there will be some nice lilies here. The street faker was with us again last Saturday, selling at low prices. The last week was quite cold for this time of the year.

Various Notes.

Quite a few florists from this vicinity attended the National Flower Show in Boston. Among them were E. H. Chamberlain, Julius Rusitzky, Harry Kranzler, George N. Borden, Edward Enos, Wm. S. Brown, Joe Peirce, Wm. H. Davenport, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Jahn, Peter Murray, James Garthley, R. H. Woodhouse and M. B. Sylvia. All report a fine exhibition, worth going far to see. W. L.

Put Down These Facts About "Dorothy Gordon"

"Dorothy Gordon" is a carnation of tried and known worth. First of all, we grew it ourselves for two years, to determine beyond question that it was as good as we thought—and we found that it lived up to every one of its promises.

Then, two years ago, we began selling rooted cuttings to other growers, all the way from Maine to Illinois. We have kept them followed up, and find that, in the majority of cases, "Dorothy Gordon" has succeeded in a big way—that it is making more flowers, and better flowers, and more money, than any other carnation they could grow.

"Dorothy Gordon" is particularly sturdy and vigorous—it is a seedling of Lawson on Enchantress with the strong constitution of both. Color, light flesh-pink; the flowers average three inches or more in diameter and are of extra good substance and form. It is, in short, an exceptionally fine carnation and brings correspondingly high prices—25 to 50% more than "Enchantress," which we grew for years.

Get in line for a good fall business; start some "Dorothy Gordon" in your houses now. We offer strong rooted cuttings at $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000

Come and look over our stock; our "latch-string is out" every week-day.

Warm Days—Outdoor Decorations—Heacock's Palms

Your trade will be getting flower-beds, etc., ready from now on, just as fast as they can; with that out of the way, the next thought will be for permanent decorations for veranda and lawn. Most of them will think of Palms the first thing; these people won't need much coaxing to buy from you if you can show a stock of Heacock's Home-grown Palms—clean, healthy and well grown.

You can help the other folks—those who aren't quite sure what they want in the way of outside stuff—by showing them some of Heacock's Palms, suggesting a few pleasing ways of arranging them and explaining how easy it is to keep them in good shape just by watering and sponging the leaves.

We want your Palm business, and we want to help you increase your Palm sales. We have a bigger stock this year than ever—thousands of big, fine specimens and hundreds of thousands of little ones—every last one of them grown right here from the seed by Palm specialists, and each given as much care as though it were the only one in our whole plant.

We'd like to tell you more about them and quote prices. Let us hear from you.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business last week was up to the standard. Stock is quite plentiful and of finest quality. Everyone is anticipating a big Easter business and is busy preparing.

Club Meeting and Exhibit.

The Detroit Florists' Club held its annual spring trade exhibit at the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange Monday evening, April 3. Much interest is taken by the trade in these seasonable exhibits, as will be seen by the list of exhibits given farther on. I have given only a partial list of the exhibits, selecting such as merit special mention.

Boosting Mothers' day was advocated. A committee was appointed to wait upon the superintendent of schools and urge children to wear all colors of carnations.

The meeting was unusually well attended. Much favorable comment was heard about the National Flower Show and a complete report will be heard at the next meeting.

The principal exhibits were as follows:

Fred Miesel, sweet peas, hydrangeas and primroses.

Louis Rush, hyacinths, tulips and spiræas.

John Dinser, hyacinths and lilies.

Albert Pochelon, of the Bemb Floral Co., Aaron Ward, Irish Melody and Double Pink Killarney.

Charles Plumb, lilac, ramblers, genistras, spiræas, azaleas, Killarney, White Killarney, Bride and Bridesmaid.

J. K. Stock, schizanthus, commonly called the poor man's orchid.

Ed Beard, of Beard Bros., azaleas, rhododendrons, mountain laurel, lilies and hydrangeas.

Thomas Browne, vase of seedlings, Pink Delight, Winona, Beacon, White Enchantress, dark pink sport of Enchantress.

M. Bloy, carnations, Bride roses, spiræas and lilies.

Fred Breitmeyer, snapdragons, Kaiserin, La Detroit, Beauties, Killarney, Canadian Queen—some of these with 4-inch stems.

Ferd. Kolbe, peas, snapdragons and carnations.

PENNSYLVANIA Pink Boston Market

A seedling of Boston Market and Harlowarden that has been under test for the past five years and which has shown up so well under all conditions that I now feel confident it is one of the best commercial varieties and have pleasure in offering it for the first time for spring delivery 1911.

The color is a shade lighter pink than Lawson; form high built, much like Boston Market; stem long and graceful; healthy grower; blooms freely from November all through the season.

This new variety I am confident will prove a money-maker—a pink Boston Market—only much larger and better and destined to be one of the most popular commercial varieties.

DENVER.

The Market.

There has been little going on in the last two weeks. The only considerable outlet seems to be funeral work, and if it were not for that, business would be poor, indeed. At the funeral of the late D. H. Moffat, the man for whom the Moffat road was named, there were quantities of flowers, and everything of good quality on the market found ready sale. Easter lilies and long-stemmed American Beauties seemed to be favorites, but a great many tea roses and violets were also used. This funeral work was done mostly by the larger concerns, and it gave them an opportunity to dispose of a quantity of stock that might otherwise have been a loss.

Nearly every ice-box in every flower store is filled to the overflowing point. This is especially true with reference to those who have contracts with growers, and who take the cut from a certain number of plants each day throughout the season. The bright, warm weather is rapidly bringing out the carnations and roses, and if it keeps up for another week it will interfere seriously with the crop for Easter. Weather conditions will absolutely control the violet supply for Easter. The indications are that there will be plenty, but should the weather suddenly make up its mind to continue warm and windy, all the violets will be burned up.

At last we are rid of the California violet peddlers—this time, we hope, for good. Their violets began to arrive in poor condition, and the loss was more than they could stand. It is a noticeable fact that as soon as they leave us, the violet business improves, but immediately after their return it drops, drops, almost out of sight.

There will be but little advance in the price of cut flowers for Easter. The retailers will be glad to hear this.

Various Notes.

The Cut Rate Flower Store, at 246 Broadway, had its opening April 1. A fern or other plant was presented to each caller.

W. C. Walter has recently added a few more greenhouses to his property at Fourth and Josephine streets. He has taken the building at Fifteenth and Cheyenne streets, has made the necessary changes and repairs and will open it in the near future as a regular flower store.

The Park Floral Co. was favored with more than half of the work for the D. H. Moffat funeral. The other half was shared by three or four of the other concerns.

The friends of J. A. Valentine are awaiting his return from the east, to congratulate him on his recent election to the presidency of the American Carnation Society. They are all proud of Mr. Valentine, and feel that they have been highly honored in having one from their city selected to fill this high office.

Charles Stone, of Pueblo, Colo., was in the city the latter part of March. He was looking for a saleslady or a salesman for his new store, which he was planning to open April 1. Other visitors were Mr. and Mrs. S. Knudsen, of Boulder, Colo. M. R. J.

Great Barrington, Mass.—T. R. Delbert has opened a downtown store.

The Market.

The cold weather has continued for several days and undoubtedly has been a big drawback to spring business. On the other hand, Easter stock can be timed and handled much more easily and without the large percentage of loss in stock that takes place when continued warm weather precedes a late Easter. Lilies will probably be plentiful in the shorter grades, with the longer ones bringing about 15 cents. Hydrangeas will also be plentiful. Other seasonable stock is rounding into shape nicely and, if the weather is pleasant, it should be a good year.

Business has been rather even during Lent and the increased stock has kept the windows crowded full of beautiful stock. A window of Rhododendron Pink Pearl caused much comment last week. It certainly is the most beautiful of the varieties which are forced for Easter and the delicate pink shades are perfect. Carnations have been overplentiful the last two weeks and have sold cheap at times. Sweet peas sell well and take the place of violets, which are not of such good quality. Bulb stock has been none too plentiful for the last week and has brought a good price.

Miss Keitsch Attacked.

Charged with shooting Elizabeth Keitsch, daughter of Henry Keitsch, of H. Keitsch & Sons Co., after a violent struggle while attempting robbery in her father's store at 810 Main street, August Seckendorf, 30 years old, a discharged driver for William F. Kasting, was locked up at police headquarters April 2. He is charged with assault and grand larceny.

According to the police, Miss Keitsch narrowly escaped death at the hands of Seckendorf. Only by a fierce struggle, during which she was dragged downstairs into the basement, did she succeed in wrenching down her assailant's revolver so that the shot, which took off her right thumb at the joint, struck one of her corset steels and was deflected from entering her heart. Seckendorf got away with $6, but his spell of liberty was brief.

Various Notes.

Jacob Wiese has taken a trip east to purchase his fancy Easter stock. This is an annual trip and he usually brings back some money-making stock.

S. A. Anderson and W. F. Kasting were in attendance at the National Flower Show at Boston.

Charles Edgar has been on the sick list during the last week.

The old reliable firm, GODFREY ASCHMANN, is not connected with any other firm and is more active than ever

Unexpected business prevented us from exhibiting our stock at the Boston Flower Show, March 25, but we kindly ask all of our many customers of the past, and now, if possible to come direct to our establishment, the Great Factory of Live Stock, a Plant Producing Mill that Never Closes, and make a personal inspection of our stock. The Germantown, Chestnut Hill, or Willow Grove trolley, at 13th and 8th and Market, will take you to West Ontario street and from there walk two squares east.

Prepare for Easter

Keep cool! Don't worry! Don't be downhearted! Cheer up! Your old, reliable friend of Philadelphia, Godfrey Aschmann, thinks of you, takes care of you and provides for you in hard times, in war times, in all times. His big stock and his cheap prices of Easter stock will certainly pull you through Easter, 1911.

If you would know the fairest sight your eyes can ever see, Where the most perfect plants are grown, to Aschmann's come with me. Why! Ne'er since flowers began to bloom was such a glorious show of all the best that florists need found in one place to grow. The lilies are the very best yet seen on Easter day. Azaleas are whole sheets of flowers, perfect in every way. The Araucarias matchless are, so are the ferns all green, With bulbs, and plumed Spiraea, the best you've ever seen. And Aschmann gives a challenge, let every florist hear, For flowers or prices, either, no rival does he fear. If you wish to gather dollars like violets in the spring, Then send your largest order, his plants the cash will bring.

Our reputation in growing Easter plants for the wholesale market, to which we ship all over the entire country, Canada and Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans, for many years past, is sufficient guarantee to prove our ability.

No joke—we have this year an immense stock of Lilies—Lilies to burn, to beat the band. Order now Easter Lilies, Lilium multiflorum, the genuine Japanese Easter Lily, directly imported by us. We have a friend in Japan who looks after our interests there. He picks out for us only the good, healthy ones, and marks them while they are growing, the 10-in. bulbs, and therefore he ships to us the cream of the plants of Japan. We have lilies this year to burn; can supply, if nothing happens, every customer and others who want lilies. If you see them growing in our greenhouses you must all admit they are "crack-erjacks." We sell them cheap, too. Where other florists get 15c per bud, we only charge you 10c per bud, for plants in 6-in. pots, having 5, 8, 10 and more buds to the plant. Plants under 5 buds, 12c per bud, 6-in. pots; in all heights, green as grass, good foliage from bottom up. Owing to lilies getting dearer every year, fully 30 per cent of them have to be dumped (we only keep the healthy ones for our customers and others), lily growing is not profitable and, as we sell our lilies cheap, it would be very much appreciated if some other plants would be included in the order.

Spiraea Gladstone for Easter

What is a Home? What is a Store? What is a Church? What is an Easter present without having a few plants of the so much admired and so greatly in demand Spiraea Gladstone? Oh, those charming sprays of beautiful pure white flowers! And the foliage, too, with its waxy, deep green color is a jewel in itself. Mixed with beautiful lilies and other blooming plants it will complete the flower decorations for your happy, joyful Easter of 1911. Knowing the great demand for this plant the past Easters, when not half our customers could be supplied, we are well prepared this year for the rush and in spite of the scarcity last fall in Holland when other florists' supplies were cut short by Holland growers, we were fortunate in obtaining enough of the bulbs to fill two houses and we are able to supply all incoming orders promptly; 5½, 6 to 7-in. pots, full of buds and flowers, and some are as big as a wash tub, 35c, 50c, 75c and $1.00 each; dozen or more the same.

Go to Headquarters for Azaleas

Azalea Indica is a specialty with us, grown for us under contract by an Azalea specialist in Belgium for the last twenty years. Have four houses full of the choicest. Only best well-known American varieties are imported, and are now in excellent condition, covered with buds, just right for Easter. We ship only good stock, full of buds and flowers.

What is the name of the best double pink azalea? Mme. Van der Cruyssen is the name, originated by the well-known azalea specialist Mr. Van der Cruyssen of Belgium. Millions are raised every year and shipped to every point of the globe from Belgium. We have a big stock on hand of this so well-known and favorite variety in tip top condition. Every plant is as round as an apple, covered with buds, just right for Easter trade. 6 to 7-in. pots, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00 each. Have only a limited number of small sizes, so the larger ones, such as the $1.25, $1.50 and $2.00 sizes, must be taken in connection with the 75c and $1.00 sizes.

Deutsche Perle. This is the best pure double white, 6-in. pots, 50c, 75c, $1.00 to $1.50.

Bernard Andrea alba (white). We have mostly big plants, $1.50, $2.00 to $3.00 each; a few smaller sizes, 75c, $1.00 to $1.25; Niobe, also white, 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00 each. Vervaeckiana, De Schryveriana (double variegated), 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $2.00 to

Pres. Oswald de Kerchove, $1.00, $1.25 to $2.00. Empress of India, 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00. Apollo (red), 50c, 60c, 75c to $1.00. Other good varieties, such as Helene Tholemann, etc., 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00. When we are out of one color, we send the next similar color; also, if we are out of the size ordered, we send the next size either above or below the price mentioned.

Hydrangea Otaksa never was as good as this year, green as grass, full of buds. 6 to 7-in. pots, 4, 5, 6 and 7 heads of flowers to the plant, every branch nicely staked up, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00 each; just right for Easter trade, never were more so than this year.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Market.

Business for the last fortnight has been good. Lent seems to have no effect on it. Stock of all kinds is in good supply and the quality also is good. Potted stock is having a good, steady call and some choice plants are to be had. The supply of bulbous stock has been a little short, as a good many growers have been trying to hold their stock until Easter, but at present the prospects are slim, and it is a risky thing to hold stock of this nature in this locality when Easter falls at so late a date. The warm weather which we may expect certainly plays havoc with it. There are a good many other plants that are far more satisfactory for this day and a few growers here are beginning to realize it and are drawing away from the Dutch bulbs. Some good azaleas, rhododendrons, lilac, astilbes, daisies, genistas and a few other flowering plants are to be seen and will be on time for the occasion. A big shortage in lilies will be felt here.

In the way of cut flowers we are well supplied, but most of the roses and carnations handled here at Easter are shipped in from Chicago and other large markets, as the cut here amounts to little at such a time when compared with the demand. Some sweet peas are coming in and are selling well. Valley and orchids are the one best bet for corsage bouquets, as violets are a thing of the past here. Among other things that are hard to get hold of are good Beauties, which are as scarce as hens' teeth. Other roses and carnations are in good supply. Some few snapdragons and a few other spring flowers are coming in and are selling well. Greens of all kinds have been hard to get at any price.

Various Notes.

The various department stores and millinery shops are having their annual spring openings and some decorations are required. Everybody seems to be getting a share of the work.

The following local florists have returned from the National Flower Show: William Walker and his son, Lee, and Geo. E. and Jacob Schulz. All are well pleased with the time spent at the show and are saying nothing but words of praise for the Boston boys and the way they did things.

The Kentucky Society of Florists accepted the invitation extended by William Walker to meet at his residence, Highlands, Tuesday night, April 4, when business regarding the 1911 convention was on docket. K. R.

Kills Weeds in 48 Hours

☐ Ammoniated Lawn Lime, a light top dressing for lawns, does it. Kills flat-leaved weeds, such as Dandelion, Daisy, Plantain, Sorrel, Chickweed, Moss, etc., in 48 hours.

☐ Saves time and labor weeding lawns.

☐ Is far superior to hand weeding, because it kills the weeds, making the pulling up or injuring the grass unnecessary. This wonderful compound will kill the weeds without injury to the grass, when used as directed. If very weedy, 1 lb. to 40 square feet; 25 lbs. to 1000 square feet (20x50). Half to one-quarter amount if moderately weedy.

...NEWS NOTES...

Battle Creek, Mich.—S. W. Coggan is building an addition to his greenhouses on South avenue.

Rosedale, Ind.—The Rosedale Greenhouses, formerly owned by J. W. Myer, have been purchased by S. R. Fisher, who will continue the business.

Muncie, Ind.—A receiver has been appointed for the Warfel Floral Co., at the request of Silas A. Richison, one of the stockholders and president of the company. In his petition for the receivership, Mr. Richison stated that the liabilities of the concern were upward of $3,500, while the assets were not over $3,000. The receiver, Isaac H. Gray, has been instructed by the court to manage the business as profitably as possible until the property can be sold.

Stamford, Conn.—The Yale & Towne Mfg. Co., the noted lock makers, who employ a force of about 2,500 at the factories here, will expend between $5,000 and $10,000 in beautifying the factory grounds with gardens and fountains. An experienced landscape gardener has been engaged and a greenhouse is already under construction. That the motive for this is practical, as well as æsthetic, is indicated by the statements of one of the company's representatives; he says he believes the employees will do more and better work on account of the inspiration that will come from the improved surroundings.

Greenhouse Heating.A BURNER FOR CRUDE OIL.

I noticed that K. L. K., writing in The Review of March 2, inquired as to where he could obtain a good burner for crude oil, to be used in heating his greenhouses. If he will correspond with J. W. Pippin, of this town, Brownwood, Tex., I think he will find that Mr. Pippin can furnish a burner that will answer the purpose. A. M. Davis.

ONE HOUSE AND LEAN-TO.

We put up a small house, 20x40, last fall and put in a hot water heater, with sufficient capacity to heat 1,000 square feet of glass, but we have not had enough heat, on account of wrong installation. At present there are three 1½-inch coils running along each side wall, under the benches, and fed from 2-inch mains. We desire to extend the present house thirty feet, making it seventy feet long and eight feet to the ridge, and wish to maintain a temperature of 45 degrees in this Idaho climate, where the outside temperature sometimes drops several degrees below zero. We are now growing vegetables only, but wish to grow a few carnations and violets. If our boiler will care for it, we wish also to add an 8-foot lean-to along the east side. We wish to devote one end of this to violets, and should like to get some hints as to heating the violet part and also as to the best plan to follow for the entire plant. The boiler is to be in a pit at the north end, in a boiler shed. M. N. A.

When a house is seventy feet long, it is advisable to use 2-inch pipes as re-

STEAM TRAPS

RETURN — NON-RETURN — VACUUM-CONDENSER

YOU, Mr. Florist, can save fuel—cut down labor—and grow better flowers by installing a Morehead Return Steam Trap.

In the first place, there is only a few degrees difference between the steam going into your heating system and the water of condensation coming from the returns.

It is very foolish, therefore, to cool this water down to a low temperature to pump back to the boilers when, by the use of the Morehead Steam Trap, the same water of condensation can be returned directly to the boilers at a very much less expense than by any other method and without losing any of the heat contained in the condensation.

In the first place, to make steam from water, fuel is required to bring this water to the boiling point under the required steam pressure.

For every ten degrees added to the water by any other means, there is a saving of 1% on fuel.

You can readily see that the cooling of the condensation from 250 degrees down to 212 or less, to accommodate your pump, means a considerable loss of heat, fuel and money.

A MOREHEAD Return Steam Trap will put this water back into your boiler at a still higher temperature than 250 degrees, and on 90% less steam required by a pump for returning the same quantity of water.

You then have a combined return trap and boiler feed outfit that will prove out to be one of the best investments you ever made.

The temperature in your houses is always kept absolutely uniform, enabling you to grow better flowers by reason of the improved conditions.

The Morehead Trap, when once installed, requires little or no attention, thus enabling you to dispense with extra help necessary to keep your heating system in good order.

If you are having condensation difficulties, or if you want to know about a better and more economical method of draining your particular steam lines, feeding your boilers and save on fuel, water and labor, write us for copy of "Trap Book," and our trial offer proposition.

turns. To maintain a temperature for carnations, when the temperature drops several degrees below zero, there should be two 2½-inch flow pipes and eight 2-inch returns. If it is desired to use the 1½-inch return pipes, they can be used for three 1½-inch returns, and, with two 2½-inch flows and five 2-inch returns, will give the desired radiating surface. For the lean-to use one 2-inch flow and three 1½-inch returns.

The total amount of radiation for the proposed house, including the lean-to, is less than 825 square feet, and a boiler rated for 1,000 square feet should therefore furnish a fair margin.

OIL STOVE FOR BOTTOM HEAT.

I need some bottom heat only for kentia seeds, so that I require only a small fire apparatus. I wish to know whether it would do to put a Perfection smokeless oil stove beneath the bench. Although these stoves are widely advertised as smokeless, they spread somewhat the odor of oil and I should like to know whether this odor would be injurious to the seeds. If you know of any other small heating device, I should like to be informed about it. A. J. V.

The Perfection oil heater does excellent work, and would probably do no harm if the wick can be cleaned every day, if the behavior of the heater is carefully watched and if it is cleaned once a day. Nearly all of the companies manufacturing greenhouse boilers make small sizes, but as no statement is made of the size of the house, no details can be given.

THE COAL MARKET.

Smith, Lineaweaver & Co., Philadelphia, make the following statement with regard to the present status of the coal market:

"The summer schedule of prices on anthracite coal went into effect April 1 and is the same as was in effect last year, with the exception of the chestnut coal price, which has been advanced 25 cents per ton. The customary advance of 10 cents per ton will be made on all domestic sizes monthly, beginning with May.

"The prices for steam sizes, buckwheat, rice and barley, are strong, owing to the fact that the demand for the domestic sizes has not been strong, and there has been a restriction of output. In addition to that, however, each year sees an advance in the price of steam sizes of anthracite coal, as the supply is not sufficient for the demand. Prices in all sizes of steam coals will be at an advance over last year. There will probably be some of the lower grades remain about the same in prices and will continue to. The low grades are procurable at exceedingly low prices. The iron business, however, seems to be improving, and that will eventually strengthen prices on bituminous coals all around. There is considerable restriction of output on bituminous coal, the operator preferring to keep his coal in the ground rather than dispose of it at low prices."

HEATING WITH EXHAUST STEAM.

We note that C. F. C., in The Review of March 16, asks for information in regard to the use of exhaust steam for greenhouse heating, and we wish to say that we have made plans and furnished the necessary vacuum features for the installing of heating systems in greenhouses, using exhaust steam at quite a distance from the houses.

GIBLIN & CO., Utica, N. Y.

In 1905 the Chamberlain & Bunker Co., of Fremont, Mich., built five greenhouses, 34x200, taking exhaust steam from a flour mill 310 feet away. They carried this steam pipe overhead on posts and placed the return pipe underground. They have since added some to these original houses. They have also connected exhaust steam into this main from a city electric light and pumping station about 150 feet farther away; this steam they use during the night and the flour mill steam through the day.

it is not necessary to carry a pressure to exceed one pound, and usually a pressure with the atmosphere or zero is sufficient. It does not work back on the engine, so as to consume any additional power, as would be the case with the ordinary system, which would require from five to eight pounds of pressure to create a circulation.

This system was also installed in 1906 in twenty-two houses, 285 feet long, for the Dunbar & Hopkins Co., Ashtabula, O. There are over eleven miles of 1¼-inch pipe in the heating system of this range. In 1909 the same firm installed this same system in a new range containing fully as much radiation, and either of these ranges can be heated with atmospheric pressure in the steam lines during average winter weather. With such a vacuum system it is possible to convey steam long distances. Instead of forcing the steam this distance and through all of the circulation and piping, the vacuum on the return pipe really draws the steam to every part of the system without any power or pressure at the head end of the system.

Anton Bros., of Clayton, Mo., are sending to the Smith Wholesale Floral Co. some extra fine carnations, nearly all of the Enchantress variety.

C. A. Kuehn had heavy consignments of carnations from his growers last week. There was a great glut of them all the week and, of course, the best quality sold first, with prices rather low. Sweet peas, tulips and lilies were also too plentiful for the demand.

Robert J. Windler, the South Grand avenue florist, announced his engagement recently to Miss Amy Zender, the handsome and accomplished daughter of Adam Zender, a well known florist of Chicago. The wedding is to take place sometime in June, in Chicago.

The Standard Scale & Fixture Co., the local agent for the McCray refrigerators for florists' use, is making a pretty display of boxes in its store under the Coliseum on Washington avenue. The firm says a number of orders have been received for florists' boxes for early summer delivery.

Some of our Kirkwood growers say that considerable building will be done during the coming summer. They have all had successful seasons with violets, carnations and sweet peas.

The Market.

Much effort has been put forth to make the Easter flower displays attractive. As Easter comes late this year, it is not an easy task to hold back the desired quantity of azaleas, lilies and bulbous stock. The flower stores, in their Easter attire, present a beautiful appearance.

Various Notes.

The large greenhouse plant of the Baur Floral Co. is nearing completion. The office is well under way, while the concrete benching is progressing rapidly.

Miss Hazel Offerle recently entertained a number of friends at a well-appointed luncheon. The favors were small baskets of violets and lily of the valley. The home was tastefully decorated with palms.

Miss Lenore Niemeyer entertained at her home a number of friends March 29. Music and cards was the order of the evening. The floral decorations were elaborate.

Among the recent visitors in Erie were J. Dilloff, representing Schloss Bros., New York, and R. H. Carey, of Zanesville, O.

Kircher, of Rochester, Ind., but will remain in charge of the business till August 1, as Mr. Kircher's lease at Rochester does not expire till that date. When Mr. Kircher takes possession here in August, he will proceed to add two new houses, one especially for roses, and will otherwise improve the property. The Market.

Roses are plentiful and the prices are more reasonable. Carnations also are abundant, with prices low. Violets will soon be gone. Bulbous stock is coming on too fast. The weather is so warm that it is causing a heavy loss to some of the florists here. It will cut the supply short on hyacinths for Easter, as they cannot be held back. We look for a heavy spring trade, as orders are coming in fast for bedding plants and porch boxes at this early date. In shrubbery there is an immense demand. Everybody is busy filling orders.

A Visit to E. G. Bunyar's.

We found Mr. Bunyar busy packing plants. His stock is looking fine this year. He had 30,000 moonvines in 2-inch pots before the shipping season opened, but his supply will soon be at an end, at the rate they are going. His Lady Bountiful carnations in solid benches are among the finest in this part of the country. Large beds of pansies are grown for winter cut flowers and are in full bloom now. Mr. Bunyar is quite successful with the California violets. He prefers to grow this variety, so he can have sweet peas in the same house and in the same bed, but in hills and far enough apart to admit light to the violets. When the violets are gone in the spring, the sweet peas are in crop, so the house is always occupied. His sweet peas are fine, with long stems and large flowers, and he gets the top price for all he is growing. Large quantities of smilax are grown here and Mr. Bunyar gets 15 cents a string and grows four strings on each hill in one year. They are planted eight inches apart each way.

Mr. Bunyar expects to add three houses during the coming summer, one for cuttings and two for violets. The violets are to be grown for Valentine's day, and then geraniums will take their place. Large quantities of stevia are to be planted next fall, as the demand is fast increasing for this flower and there is never enough to go around.

MAKE MORE MONEY

☞ There are few soils that do not need Lime; there are no greenhouses in which the proper and liberal use of Lime will not pay for itself a hundred times over.

☞ This Lime I am offering you is not to be confounded with the ordinary Lime; it is hydrated, pulverized to a powder, is put up in bags and can be kept for any length of time in a dry place.

☞ A thousand pounds to an acre of ground, a three-inch potful to half a bushel of soil, a light sprinkle put over the soil in your benches will produce results that would make it cheap at any price.

☞ Send me $4.00 for half a ton, you will find it the best investment you ever made, and do it now, for there is not enough profit in it for me to continue advertising, but I want every florist to know about it and would like every florist who reads this to try at least half a ton.

Various Notes.

A. Arnold has four good houses well filled with bedding plants, mostly geraniums in 3-inch pots. Two-year-old roses in pots are grown in fine shape and such stock should find a ready sale, as no other florist seems to grow them here. Mr. Arnold sells all his output in the city market. He runs two wagons in the spring season. No cut flowers are grown, except calla lilies, which are extra large. They are grown on raised benches. Mr. Arnold has been ill for the last five weeks.

Judging by the lumber and greenhouse material that are piled up in large stacks, R. S. Brown & Son are going to build more greenhouses this summer at the Independence range.

Miss Jennie Murray had a nice show window of blooming plants last week.

D. Freudenthal, who usually believes in maintaining good prices on cut flowers, last Saturday decided that he would not be outdone by his neighbors, so he stocked up heavily on carnations and 2 cents was the cry.

The Flower Shop, formerly at Eleventh and Main streets, has opened a large store between the walls of the burned Ridge building. They are making quite a large display on the outside. This location is near two of the best banks and on a busy street, so there is no reason why this ought not to be a first-class stand.

We notice that the Alpha Floral Co.'s show window shows some new and effective artistic touches, since the new decorator has taken things in hand.

The Rock Flower Co.'s show window is always good to look at, as good taste is displayed here in decorating.

Samuel Murray never stands back for any of his competitors. His window is always full of rich stock, well arranged.
W. H. H.

Chillicothe, Mo.—R. L. Isherwood recently shipped a geranium to H. Cannell & Sons, of Swanley, Kent, England, which arrived in good condition and will be grown by the English nurserymen, who promise to notify Mr. Isherwood how it compares with the varieties grown there.

Charles City, Ia.—M. H. Wetherbee, on upper Main street, has begun the erection of an addition of two greenhouses, each 27x123, and expects that they will be completed by May 1. A new steam boiler will be installed. Mr. Wetherbee's business was founded twenty-two years ago and has been marked by a steady, substantial increase.

OUR efforts are to assure each and every customer of a square deal, for we intend that every transaction shall be so satisfactory to each customer that it may become a real pleasure for him to order from us.

Our line offers some attractive changes from that of last year, yet in spite of the universal increase in material and labor our own mechanical manner of manufacturing enables us to maintain the same standard prices, which are as follows:

Advance Machine (self oiling and locking) complete.....	Each $10.50
Arms, complete with screws.....	.24 1/2
Hangers, complete with screws.....	.08
Double Strength Shafting Pipe, per ft.,	.08
Single Strength Shafting Pipe, per ft.,	.05

The hundreds of unsolicited orders that enter our factory yearly receive the same careful attention as those that come from old customers. We are fair and square to every one and give the same reasonable low price to all. Try us. Let us demonstrate to you our ability to take care of your needs in the best possible manner. 91-93 CHAMBERS ST. NEW YORK

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet.
An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

SHADING FOR GREENHOUSES.

What would be a good substitute for lime shading on greenhouses? Owing to the destructive nature of lime, which eats and destroys paint and putty, causing leaks and decay and also making it difficult to repaint while the shade is on, I have decided to discontinue its use. Here seems to be an opening for some enterprising chemist to invent and put on the market some canned and prepared shade. A. A.

Lime is now little used as a shading material on greenhouses, for the reasons you have stated. A far better material is naphtha or kerosene and ordinary white lead. Keep it well stirred; apply either with a brush, or with a force pump if the houses are large. You can make it thin or thick, according to the season and the varieties of plants to be shaded. This shading is more adhesive than lime wash and is beneficial rather than injurious to the woodwork and putty. For a still lighter shade, kerosene and ordinary whiting can be used. Any of these shades can be easily removed when desired, by merely damping them and rubbing with a brush. The early frosts assist in loosening it. Be careful not to use linseed oil in your white lead, or you will have serious difficulty in removing it from the glass.

There may be some special canned preparations on the market, but you can easily mix your own shading and economize quite a little by doing so. C. W.

PERPETUAL FLOWERING FREESIA.

I have a freesia on my place that has carmine or orange flowers and it has bloomed several times this winter. Every flower is the same. Is there any such bulb on the market, or is it a freak? F. T.

I do not know of any freesia which flowers several times during the winter. F. refracta alba and F. Leichtlinii throw a single spike, and if yours throws several it is certainly a distinct break and one well worthy of perpetuation. You cannot purchase bulbs of any such variety. C. W.

Holyoke, Mass.—Gallivan Bros. will contribute the decorations for the model aviation exhibition, to be held in the city hall April 22.

Sioux City, Ia.—Rocklin & Lehman have been renovating and redecorating the interior of their store and expected to have the improvements completed in time for the Easter trade.

LET'S FIGURE IT OUT—YOU AND I

No matter what kind of house you build you have to spend the same money for the sides, the glass, the putty, the ventilating sash and apparatus, and the benches. If you buy first-class materials for these the only difference in cost between it and our Iron Frame House is on the frame itself. That means that any money you save in putting up a cheaper house than our Iron Frame one is only cheaper because of its poorer frame. It is a cheapening of the most vital part of your house—the supporting part. Can you, then, afford to make that kind of a temporary saving on a temporary frame, as against a permanent frame as a permanent investment? Of course you can't. If you will give us a chance we can show you some surprising figures on comparative cost of houses. They will certainly open your eyes.

BRAMPTON, ONT.

The Gardeners' Chronicle, published in London, England, recently printed a lengthy account of a visit to the Dale estate, from which the following notes are culled:

"From the Dale greenhouses go out the roses and carnations which supply the whole Dominion, or at all events reach to the uttermost parts of it. Consignments of these and other flowers are sent regularly as far as Newfoundland on the one side and Vancouver on the other. In times of glut the flowers of the Dale nurseries invade New York itself, though for tariff and other reasons that market is not favored at other times. The distribution of cut flowers over such great distances has compelled the adoption of the most careful methods for preparing the flowers for transport. The method found most successful is to bring the carnations, roses, etc., into a cool room and to keep them for one to two days in a temperature of about 52 degrees or as much below 60 degrees as can be managed conveniently.

"Though carnations and roses loom largest in the Dale nurseries, other plants are grown on an extensive scale, and a considerable trade is done in the distribution of plants (Ampelopsis Veitchii, which is hardy in that part of Canada) and cuttings of carnations, which are sent out in thin paper 'pots,' five per pot, as far afield as the Rockies. Adiantum is grown largely and also lily of the valley. Orchids, which are comparatively a new venture, are now being cultivated on a large scale. They are accommodated in four houses, each 25x115 feet, and four more houses are about to be built. The cultivation in this department is under the charge of W. J. Jones. The orchid cultivation was started eight years ago by a Dutchman, who was originally engaged to grow lily of the valley on a commercial scale. The orchids grown include Cattleya Mendellii, Laelia purpurata and L. majus. At the time of our visit, a large collection of South American orchids had just been received, including 1,500 plants of Cattleya Schroederæ, C. gigas and C. Skinneri, 1,000 lycastes and 2,000 Cattleya Trianæ.

"The roses are grown planted out in cement benches. The benches are each about one foot deep. At the bottom of the bench, clay is put to ten inches from the top, and then at intervals and running longitudinally tile drains are placed. The bench is filled in with three inches of cinders over the drains and then five inches of soil. The houses are steam-heated, the pipes running along the top. The roses, which are grown on the Manetti stock, are cut back moderately from May onward to provide successional blooms, and serve for about six years. The plants do not get a complete rest, but the soil is allowed to become somewhat dry at the 'resting period.' The head of the indoor department was emphatic on the necessity for the adoption of special methods for Canadian conditions."

The Market.

The situation last week was depressing, there being little demand for anything in the way of flowers, and as a result stock piled up and prices ruled low. The supply of carnations seems to have had no limit, though conditions at the time of writing seem to have somewhat improved. The quality has been exceptionally fine, but buyers were unusually discriminating. Cheap and common stock was entirely neglected and cleaning up sales were made in many instances at extremely low prices. Easter lilies are beginning to be seen on all counters in liberal quantities. The indications are that the supply will be large. Callas are also plentiful. Roses are of exceptionally good quality and are moving fairly well.

The consignments of southern daffodils are now about at their height and the receipts are evidently more than can be handled. Many consignments arrived in bad condition—in fact, so soft as to be unsalable. Greens are more plentiful.

THE QUESTION OF INSURANCE

Fire Insurance.

The number of inquiries regarding various forms of insurance received by the REVIEW indicate that an article on this subject will be of interest to the trade.

First, in regard to fire insurance. An interview with W. A. Blodgett, western manager of the Springfield F. and M. Insurance Co., of Springfield, Mass., brought out the fact that most of the leading fire insurance companies now are glad to write insurance on greenhouse buildings at their regular rates for this class of risk. These rates vary according to location, construction, fire protection, location of boiler house, arrangement of heating apparatus, precautions taken to prevent fire, etc.

Many times a little foresight and planning in the proper arrangement of a greenhouse plant will effect a great saving in the insurance rate at practically no additional construction expense. For instance, if the boiler room is built entirely separate from the houses, the rate will be much lower than it will if the boiler room is surrounded by the houses. Again, if the boiler and main flow pipes are covered with asbestos, the rate will be lowered, and if concrete, stone or brick, instead of wood, is used for the boiler house walls, a further saving in the insurance rate will be secured.

In fact, before building a greenhouse it would be well to take up such questions with the local insurance agent, who could tell just what should be done to secure the minimum rate.

Of course, a greenhouse that enjoys city fire department protection will get a lower rate than one without that advantage, although the fact that every greenhouse is supplied with hose for watering purposes, and always quickly available in case of fire, is necessarily a help.

The reason that greenhouse insurance is comparatively recent is because insurance men for years looked upon greenhouses as poorly constructed from the fire risk point of view, but since modern methods and up-to-date materials are being used, the usual type of present day greenhouse is a much improved structure and is able to hold its own as a fire risk with any other type of building.

Of course, in every class of buildings growing plants is constantly changing, and that, therefore, there is no definite basis on which to fix rates or settle losses; second, that the crops grown vary with the seasons and consequently, even if a reasonable basis could be found for a certain crop, the following crop would, in nine cases out of ten, have a different value.

Taking all the foregoing into consideration, it is evident that florists will have to be content with insurance against fire loss on the buildings alone. Of course, there is no question but that such insurance is a wise precaution, and any local agent representing the well known, reliable fire insurance companies, should be able to write such a policy at reasonable rates.

Hail Insurance.

In taking up the matter of hail insurance, it was found that few of the regular glass insurance companies will there are some individual cases of old, tumble-down structures, which are absolutely refused insurance by the responsible companies, and naturally the greenhouses are no exception. Therefore, if insurance is refused, it is well to inquire for the reason and, if possible, improve the conditions till all the objections are overcome.

Mr. Blodgett further stated that, so far as he knew, none of the reliable companies will accept insurance on stock in the greenhouses, and he gave the following reasons: First, that the value of greenhouses against loss from breakage of glass, either from hail or other causes. Nearly all of them seem to be of the opinion that the percentage of loss from such risks is so high that in order to write such policies with profit the rate would be away beyond the reach of the great majority of florists.

This view of the matter would seem to indicate a surprising lack of investigation by the glass insurance companies, because, as is well known to practically every greenhouse owner, the Florists' Hail Association of America insures greenhouse glass at a low rate, and is in a flourishing condition and pays all losses promptly.

This association was formed in 1885, in conjunction with the S. A. F. In fact, one of the principal objects in organizing the S. A. F. was the formation of this Hail Association, as the need of such insurance was badly felt. The officers and directors of the association are all well known in the trade and the association now has over 32,500,000 square feet of glass insured. It is a purely mutual organization, in which the members place in the hands of the treasurer one advanced assessment in order that losses may be paid promptly. The reserve fund, which is used only in great emergency, now amounts to $21,700. The present membership numbers over 1,600, located in nearly every state, and several in Canada. The fact that over 1,430 losses, amounting to more than $165,000, have been paid during the last twenty-five years is in itself sufficient argument in favor of the wisdom of hail insurance.

In view of the heavy losses in broken glass, caused by hail in recent years, it appears evident that every greenhouse owner in the country would do well to join the association. John G. Esler, Saddle River, N. J., is the secretary, and full particulars may be obtained from him.

Storm Insurance.

In endeavoring to obtain storm insurance (the insurance companies call it is typical of the conditions to be met in many similar sections of the country. In the first place it must be remembered that this plant was only recently constructed and is modern and up-to-date in every particular.

This firm found several insurance companies that would write tornado policies on their risk, covering the entire establishment, including the glass, at rates that varied from $2 to $5 per $100 of insurance, but they considered this charge excessive and the manner in which their insurance agent finally obtained the policies at only about half of the lowest rate mentioned before, was quite unique. Of course, it is understood that this rate is applicable only under similar conditions and is mentioned because the principle involved might be tried in any locality. The method of insurance follows:

A responsible casualty company was found that would write a policy against the breakage of the glass from any cause; hail, storms, tornadoes, in fact, any breakage of glass whatsoever, but not covering any other damage that might result from the same cause. Then a tornado insurance company was induced to write a policy covering all the buildings, etc., but excluding the actual glass. In other words, this policy covered the framework of the houses, the benches, boiler-house, smokestack, and various other buildings, but under any being made of the insured boilers frequently point out defects in time to avoid serious accident, and often reveal inefficiency on the part of employees, whose ignorance may ruin a valuable plant, even without causing an explosion. At first glance the foregoing statement does not show the full extent of the protection offered as compared with the payment of loss resulting from an explosion, so let us consider further.

A serious boiler explosion is a terrible thing. It frequently, in fact usually, means a loss of life, in addition to great property damage. Anything that can be done to prevent these disasters is a sacred duty. Just think—since October 1, 1867, there have occurred over 10,000 recorded boiler explosions, causing the death of more than 12,500 persons, the injury of 16,000 others, and the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property. Boiler inspection would have saved a large proportion of those lives and much of the damaged property.

Many owners of heating boilers have the mistaken idea that, because of the low pressure carried, the boiler is not so liable to explode as a high pressure boiler. This is not true, however. A high pressure power boiler is fully as strong, in relation to pressure carried, as the low pressure heating boiler, and the one is no more subject to explosion than the other. This fact is fully shown by the many explosions that occur in low pressure heating plants. The accompanying illustrations give some idea of a most disastrous heating boiler explosion which occurred in the greenhouses of George M. Kellogg, Pleasant Hill, Mo. The damage was estimated at $75,000. No one was injured, as the explosion occurred just before the employees arrived for work in the morning, but about 50,000 square feet of glass were destroyed.

This boiler was one of thirteen, and investigation after the accident showed that inspection service would most likely have found the defect in time to prevent the disaster. This case is only one of many, and, if space would permit, example after example could be given showing conclusively that heating boilers should be inspected as regularly and thoroughly as the power variety.

The Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Co., which is the only company that handles boiler insurance exclusively and is, without doubt, the strongest and most reliable concern in the business, makes the following statement: "It is sometimes difficult for a layman to understand how it is possible for a steam heating boiler, operated at a pressure of from five to fifteen pounds per square inch, to explode. It is more difficult to understand how a hot water boiler can explode, when it is not supposed to carry any steam pressure at all. To those of us who are in the business of inspecting and insuring boilers of all types, there is nothing strange about it, particularly in view of the conditions of care and management under which these low pressure boilers are operated."

Here is another case which emphasizes the facts previously stated. A horizontal tubular boiler used for heating the greenhouses of Miller & Sons, at Bracondale, near Toronto, Canada, and operated at a pressure of from five to ten pounds per square inch, exploded at 1:30 p. m., April 21, 1909. The boiler was completely disrupted, a portion of it weighing about one ton being thrown a distance of nearly one-quarter of a mile. The property dam-tornado insurance), the average greenhouse owner is apt to experience considerable difficulty in getting it at a rate that he would think at all reasonable.

As is probably well known, this insurance covers loss or damage of any kind resulting from wind storms, tornadoes, cyclones, etc., and naturally the rates vary greatly according to the weather conditions that prevail in various sections of the country. For instance, in Kansas, which is known as one of the tornado states, the rates would be much higher than in a territory like that around Chicago, where disastrous wind storms are a rare occurrence.

It has been a hard matter, however, even to get this insurance at a reasonable rate in Chicago, and the experience of one of the large greenhouse concerns near that city may be of interest, as it and all circumstances excluded damage to glass. The combination of the two policies, however, covered everything and by dividing the responsibility between the two companies, a rate resulted that was just about half that asked by either company if they insured all the points involved.

The principle is to divide the responsibility and reduce the cost, and this might be done to advantage in any part of the country, the rates being lower or higher according to the individual risk and its location.

Boiler Insurance.

When we come to the question of boiler insurance, we reach a phase of insurance that is entirely different from any other. In what way? In the fact that the inspections which are constantly age amounted to about $50,000, and not a cent's worth of insurance was carried. Even supposing that inspection would not have prevented the accident, insurance would have taken away the sting of the loss.

When considering the advisability of boiler insurance, remember that the inspections are really the most valuable part, and these points should be borne in mind: That is cheapest which is best. This is especially true of boiler insurance. Good mechanics cannot be secured at less than standard prices, and good inspections require that a certain amount of time be consumed in making them. A few dollars saved in premiums at the cost of efficiency in inspections, may mean thousands wasted in the end. The advice that a good company is able to furnish its policy holders is frequently the means of saving them, in economies, many times the cost of the service.

The REVIEW heartily endorses insurance of all kinds, when taken out in reputable companies, and recommends to its readers the serious consideration of this protection wherever and whenever possible.

CEMENT BENCHES IN ENGLAND.

It may be remembered that when W. Wells, of W. Wells & Co., Merstham, England, visited this country last fall, he was favorably impressed with the results obtained here by the use of concrete benches, and one of the features of this system of benching that especially appealed to him was its economy. Since his return to England he has given the concrete benches a trial in some of his own carnation and chrysanthemum houses, and is highly pleased with the outcome of the experiment. The Horticultural Advertiser (English) gives the following account of Mr. Wells' method of constructing the benches:

"The benches have all been made on the nurseries at Merstham by the handy man, and two entirely different methods have been tried in the construction. At first, a flat surface was prepared with floor boards, which was bordered with boards firmly fixed to form the edges of the bench. Molds of the exact size were then made from floor boards to form a partition, so that the bench was composed of sections eighteen inches wide, to enable one to handle and fix them. The cement was then leveled in the bottom, and, to hold the edge inside, a plank was tacked to the inside of the partition mold, making the bottom surface two and one-half inches thick, and the side edges two and one-half to one and one-half inches. These benches were three feet wide where they fitted against the sides of the house, and five feet when in the center. Three feet is quite as far as one can reach to plant, etc.

"The proportions were four parts of sharp sand to one of cement, which was knocked up wet. In about a week's time the sections could be moved from the molds and stood up on end with care, and from then given plenty of water until set quite hard. The second method is much preferred, however, for it is quicker and does not take so much ground space. For this, a box mold was made in two pieces, so that the cement could be rammed in and the mold taken off, merely by opening the two parts. The proportions here are the same, but the cement or sand should not be wetted at all. It should be put in the mold and well rammed when moist enough to cling when squeezed in the hand. In half an hour the mold can be taken off and the newly made section be damped down with plenty of water from a fine rose. In three days this section will be solid enough to be stacked close to others, so that the sun and wind do not dry them too quickly. In less than a month they can be placed in the house, but it is best not to hurry.

"Drainage holes should be allowed for by either method, also two pieces of thin pipe. Or, better still, bed laths should be put almost the whole length of the section to give it support. The bench system has been tried and found unsatisfactory by some growers in England—due, no doubt, to the incorrect method of fixing. The idea is to get good drainage, warmth and air under and around the roots. It should not be confused with the raised border, from which it has quite a different effect. In fixing, the bench should be raised at least six inches clear from the ground, and is best supported on light iron rails, such as are used by contractors. These can be obtained cheap. By this mode, a man can water 1,000 plants in a few minutes; in fact, a house does not require a tenth the labor spent on it when pots are used. It does not take so long to plant as it does to pot, and, finally, the results in the first trial at Merstham are quite sufficient to warrant extensions without considering the labor-saving point of view, and growers are recommended to give the system a trial."

ARRANGEMENT OF SHRUBS.

Never plant shrubs, nor flowers, nor anything else, in the center of the lawn, says the National Council of Horticulture in one of its recent bulletins distributed to the newspapers of the country. Such planting dwarfs the place and spoils all artistic effect.

Where the house foundation meets the lawn is a harsh line. Plant shrubs around the house, close to the foundation, to hide it. The view under the front porch is not pleasing, so plant something to hide that. The weekly wash and other things occasionally seen in the backyard are not beautiful, so plant a screen of tall shrubs from the back of the house to the fence on either side. The division fences are not handsome, so shrubs may be planted to hide them, at least partly. Square corners are not pleasing, so plant shrubs in the corners to round them off.

greenhouse glass at a low rate, and is in a flourishing condition and pays all losses promptly.

This association was formed in 1885, in conjunction with the S. A. F. In fact, one of the principal objects in organizing the S. A. F. was the formation of this Hail Association, as the need of such insurance was badly felt. The officers and directors of the association are all well known in the trade and the association now has over 32,500,000 square feet of glass insured. It is a purely mutual organization, in which the members place in the hands of the treasurer one advanced assessment in order that losses may be paid promptly. The reserve fund, which is used only in great emergency, now amounts to $21,700. The present membership numbers over 1,600, located in nearly every state, and several in Canada. The fact that over 1,430 losses, amounting to more than $165,000, have been paid during the last twenty-five years is in itself sufficient argument in favor of the wisdom of hail insurance.

In view of the heavy losses in broken glass, caused by hail in recent years, it appears evident that every greenhouse owner in the country would do well to join the association. John G. Esler, Saddle River, N. J., is the secretary, and full particulars may be obtained from him.

Storm Insurance.

In endeavoring to obtain storm insurance (the insurance companies call it is typical of the conditions to be met in many similar sections of the country. In the first place it must be remembered that this plant was only recently constructed and is modern and up-to-date in every particular.

This firm found several insurance companies that would write tornado policies on their risk, covering the entire establishment, including the glass, at rates that varied from $2 to $5 per $100 of insurance, but they considered this charge excessive and the manner in which their insurance agent finally obtained the policies at only about half of the lowest rate mentioned before, was quite unique. Of course, it is understood that this rate is applicable only under similar conditions and is mentioned because the principle involved might be tried in any locality. The method of insurance follows:

A responsible casualty company was found that would write a policy against the breakage of the glass from any cause: hail, storms, tornadoes, in fact, any breakage of glass whatsoever, but not covering any other damage that might result from the same cause. Then a tornado insurance company was induced to write a policy covering all the buildings, etc., but excluding the actual glass. In other words, this policy covered the framework of the houses, the benches, boiler-house, smokestack, and various other buildings, but under any being made of the insured boilers frequently point out defects in time to avoid serious accident, and often reveal inefficiency on the part of employees, whose ignorance may ruin a valuable plant, even without causing an explosion. At first glance the foregoing statement does not show the full extent of the protection offered as compared with the payment of loss resulting from an explosion, so let us consider further.

A serious boiler explosion is a terrible thing. It frequently, in fact usually, means a loss of life, in addition to great property damage. Anything that can be done to prevent these disasters is a sacred duty. Just think—since October 1, 1867, there have occurred over 10,000 recorded boiler explosions, causing the death of more than 12,500 persons, the injury of 16,000 others, and the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property. Boiler inspection would have saved a large proportion of those lives and much of the damaged property.

Many owners of heating boilers have the mistaken idea that, because of the low pressure carried, the boiler is not so liable to explode as a high pressure boiler. This is not true, however. A high pressure power boiler is fully as strong, in relation to pressure carried, as the low pressure heating boiler, and the one is no more subject to explosion than the other. This fact is fully shown by the many explosions that occur in low pressure heating plants. The accompanying illustrations give some idea of a most disastrous heating boiler explosion which occurred in the greenhouses of George M. Kellogg, Pleasant Hill, Mo. The damage was estimated at $75,000. No one was injured, as the explosion occurred just before the employees arrived for work in the morning, but about 50,000 square feet of glass were destroyed.

This boiler was one of thirteen, and investigation after the accident showed that inspection service would most likely have found the defect in time to prevent the disaster. This case is only one of many, and, if space would permit, example after example could be given showing conclusively that heating boilers should be inspected as regularly and thoroughly as the power variety.

The Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Co., which is the only company that handles boiler insurance exclusively and is, without doubt, the strongest and most reliable concern in the business, makes the following statement: "It is sometimes difficult for a layman to understand how it is possible for a steam heating boiler, operated at a pressure of from five to fifteen pounds per square inch, to explode. It is more difficult to understand how a hot water boiler can explode, when it is not supposed to carry any steam pressure at all. To those of us who are in the business of inspecting and insuring boilers of all types, there is nothing strange about it, particularly in view of the conditions of care and management under which these low pressure boilers are operated."

Here is another case which emphasizes the facts previously stated. A horizontal tubular boiler used for heating the greenhouses of Miller & Sons, at Bracondale, near Toronto, Canada, and operated at a pressure of from five to ten pounds per square inch, exploded at 1:30 p. m., April 21, 1909. The boiler was completely disrupted, a portion of it weighing about one ton being thrown a distance of nearly one-quarter of a mile. The property dam-tornado insurance), the average greenhouse owner is apt to experience considerable difficulty in getting it at a rate that he would think at all reasonable.

As is probably well known, this insurance covers loss or damage of any kind resulting from wind storms, tornadoes, cyclones, etc., and naturally the rates vary greatly according to the weather conditions that prevail in various sections of the country. For instance, in Kansas, which is known as one of the tornado states, the rates would be much higher than in a territory like that around Chicago, where disastrous wind storms are a rare occurrence.

It has been a hard matter, however, even to get this insurance at a reasonable rate in Chicago, and the experience of one of the large greenhouse concerns near that city may be of interest, as it and all circumstances excluded damage to glass. The combination of the two policies, however, covered everything and by dividing the responsibility between the two companies, a rate resulted that was just about half that asked by either company if they insured all the points involved.

The principle is to divide the responsibility and reduce the cost, and this might be done to advantage in any part of the country, the rates being lower or higher according to the individual risk and its location.

Boiler Insurance.

When we come to the question of boiler insurance, we reach a phase of insurance that is entirely different from any other. In what way? In the fact that the inspections which are constantly age amounted to about $50,000, and not a cent's worth of insurance was carried. Even supposing that inspection would not have prevented the accident, insurance would have taken away the sting of the loss.

When considering the advisability of boiler insurance, remember that the inspections are really the most valuable part, and these points should be borne in mind: That is cheapest which is best. This is especially true of boiler insurance. Good mechanics cannot be secured at less than standard prices, and good inspections require that a certain amount of time be consumed in making them. A few dollars saved in premiums at the cost of efficiency in inspections, may mean thousands wasted in the end. The advice that a good company is able to furnish its policy holders is frequently the means of saving them, in economies, many times the cost of the service.

The REVIEW heartily endorses insurance of all kinds, when taken out in reputable companies, and recommends to its readers the serious consideration of this protection wherever and whenever possible.

CEMENT BENCHES IN ENGLAND.

It may be remembered that when W. Wells, of W. Wells & Co., Merstham, England, visited this country last fall, he was favorably impressed with the results obtained here by the use of concrete benches, and one of the features of this system of benching that especially appealed to him was its economy. Since his return to England he has given the concrete benches a trial in some of his own carnation and chrysanthemum houses, and is highly pleased with the outcome of the experiment. The Horticultural Advertiser (English) gives the following account of Mr. Wells' method of constructing the benches:

"The benches have all been made on the nurseries at Merstham by the handy man, and two entirely different methods have been tried in the construction. At first, a flat surface was prepared with floor boards, which was bordered with boards firmly fixed to form the edges of the bench. Molds of the exact size were then made from floor boards to form a partition, so that the bench was composed of sections eighteen inches wide, to enable one to handle and fix them. The cement was then leveled in the bottom, and, to hold the edge inside, a plank was tacked to the inside of the partitioning mold, making the bottom surface two and one-half inches thick, and the side edges two and one-half to one and one-half inches. These benches were three feet wide where they fitted against the sides of the house, and five feet when in the center. Three feet is quite as far as one can reach to plant, etc.

"The proportions were four parts of sharp sand to one of cement, which was knocked up wet. In about a week's time the sections could be moved from the molds and stood up on end with care, and from then given plenty of water until set quite hard. The second method is much preferred, however, for it is quicker and does not take so much ground space. For this, a box mold was made in two pieces, so that the cement could be rammed in and the mold taken off, merely by opening the two parts. The proportions here are the same, but the cement or sand should not be wetted at all. It should be put in the mold and well rammed when moist enough to cling when squeezed in the hand. In half an hour the mold can be taken off and the newly made section be damped down with plenty of water from a fine rose. In three days this section will be solid enough to be stacked close to others, so that the sun and wind do not dry them too quickly. In less than a month they can be placed in the house, but it is best not to hurry.

"Drainage holes should be allowed for by either method, also two pieces of thin pipe. Or, better still, bed laths should be put almost the whole length of the section to give it support. The bench system has been tried and found unsatisfactory by some growers in England—due, no doubt, to the incorrect method of fixing. which can be hidden by plantations of shrubbery, plant it out. Use shrubbery for all these purposes, because while flower plants are dead seven months in the year, shrubbery partly conceals and has pleasing forms even in winter.

Do not make a circle in the lawn around every shrub you plant. Plant the shrubs in borders and plant them fairly thick, since if you get them too far apart they will suffer from drought and winter winds.

CAVEAT EMPTOR.

A number of letters from florists in the state of Ohio recently have reached The Review, complaining of the treatment the florists have received at the hands of a concern, salesmen for which had induced them to put in perfumery as a side-line. The florists state in their letters that the salesmen make it appear that the florist has everything to gain and nothing whatever to lose, but that, having signed his name "to a little printed form," it turns out that the florist has agreed to do a number of things about which the agent said nothing. The florists say that threats are employed to compel them to live up to the agreement signed without understanding its character. One florist writes: "The company's agent told us they were looking up the florists to introduce their goods, and in return for the privilege of placing them on sale would give the florist $150 worth of advertising free. The salesman made the proposition look like gold, and not to cost the florist a cent, but to insure him a neat little sum at the end of the year for his trouble. The agent winds up with a neat little contract that he reads to the florist, but only the part best suited to his purpose, and gets the florist to sign his name to it. When objection is made to signing he says in a smooth way that it is only a little form to show the florist's good intention in taking care of the stock and giving it a chance to sell. In a few days along comes $200 worth of goods, with a bill showing you have bought the stock at thirty days net, or your notes for four, six, eight and ten months. In my case the bill arrived one day before the goods and I saw at once how the game was going, so I flatly refused to accept the goods. After the goods had lain in the freight house unclaimed for over thirty days, on advice of my attorney I paid the freight both ways and sent them back. The company has since been trying to get me to sign the notes in settlement, or they would bring suit."

One of the best rules to apply in dealing with a plausible stranger is to retain a copy of all his literature and not close the deal until after a sufficient time for consideration and investigation. Another rule, and one that is so plain that it seems strange any man would fail to observe it, is not to sign any paper until you have taken that paper in your own hands and read it through with care.

HERE WE SHOW YOU.

At St. Joseph, in the Show Me state, the Stuppy Floral Co. has two establishments. They are pictured herewith. The older place adjoins the largest cemetery in the city and from it the establishment gets the name of Mt. Mora Greenhouses. This range of glass is devoted entirely to carnations and bedding plants. An extremely large cemetery trade is handled here. The newer establishment, out in the country, consists of eleven houses, each 29x200. All of these are in roses, eight of them being devoted to Killarney and American Beauty. It is an ideal location for cut flower growing, with plenty of good soil right at hand. The picture does not show the service building at the new establishment; it stands just to the right of the houses.

Spiræas unsold should not be thrown away. It is not generally known how much finer home-grown spiræa roots are than those imported. If large, chop them in two with a sharp spade and plant out in nursery rows in good ground, allowing eighteen inches between the plants. If set out now, these plants should not be dug up until the late fall of 1912, when many of them will need cutting in two or three pieces to make them go in 7-inch pots.

Azaleas should have all flowers and flower seeds removed. After the middle of May they can be planted out in any good garden soil, where they can be reached with the hose. If kept well syringed, these will bloom earlier and more freely than what are imported. Ericas can have much the same treatment as azaleas, at least such varieties as Mediterranea, Caffra densa and melanthera. Prune back the long shoots a little. They can be planted out at the same time as the azaleas, as can any left-over camellias. In the case of rhododendrons, these plants prefer some shade, particularly from the morning sun, and should have a liberal mulch of spent manure or partly decayed leaves. Genistas, if of considerable size, hardly pay to carry over. They cannot be planted out, as they do not lift well, and it is really more work to keep them than to grow along younger stock.

Memorial Day Crops.

Hydrangeas should now have their heads just peeping. Give them sufficient space so that they will stand clear of each other. Water they must have in abundance. Few plants require greater quantities. Apply liquid manure every third day as soon as the flower heads show, discontinuing it when the flowers show color. In order not to draw the plants, a night temperature not exceeding 55 degrees is to be preferred, but in case they are late give them 10 degrees more for a time. A spraying overhead on clear days will greatly refresh the plants. If a sufficient number of cuttings have not yet been put in, look over the plants and take off a quantity of shoots which will not flower. These will root in about three weeks and make excellent plants for another season. Do not allow the earliest batch of rooted cuttings to remain too long in the sand or to become much potbound before shifting them.

Benches containing ten weeks' stocks, gladioli, snapdragons, candytuft and other Memorial day crops should be scratched over at least once a week and have all weeds removed. Pull out all single stocks. They have little commercial value. Rub the side shoots from the snapdragons and see that they have the necessary supports. Mark plants of extra good varieties and insert a batch of cuttings of each. Lilium longiflorum, if it shows its buds at Easter, can easily be held for Memorial Day. In the case of L. candidum, if buds can be seen May 1, they will be in time, provided they have a light, sunny house.

Standard Heliotropes.

Heliotropes as bedding plants are well known and popular. A bed of them is much improved if one or two standards can be dotted through it. The growing of standards presents few difficulties. They can be had either from cuttings or seed. The latter produces the more vigorous plants. Select the most robust plants for standards. Rub away all side shoots and remove all flowers. Carry up the stem to any desired height before finally pinching it and allowing it to make a head. Of course, a stake of sufficient stoutness to hold the plant erect must be used. It is not now too late to root cuttings to grow on into standards. If grown along all summer and winter, these can be flowered if desired for Easter, as more than one enterprising grower has done, or if preferred can be potted on and sold in large pots or small tubs for summer flowering. If kept well watered and fed, these heliotropes will bloom practically all summer, and if big specimens are desired, the old plants can be carried over winter moderately cool and dry and then pruned back a little and started in heat as spring advances. These standards, when securely staked and plunged to prevent blowing over, are charming features in any garden.

Marguerites.

Marguerite plants which are grown for cutting should now have the pots or boxes stood on the beds or benches, so that they can root through freely, and will, in addition, need lots of water and frequent feeding, or the stems will not have the length or the flowers the size we would like to see. Plants set out in narrow benches will now be coming to flower freely and should give a crop until the latter part of June. Marguerites as winter bloomers must have their root run restricted, but after the early spring they flower finely planted directly in the benches. Young stock, both yellow and white varieties, should have the flowers pinched off. These should be carried over summer in a cold house or frame, and if they can have shade from laths to keep them cooler, they will summer much better, especially the yellow varieties. Marguerites are being more grown every year and sell as well as any flower on the market, and the grower who may have a house not quite adapted for carnation or rose culture may turn it to good advantage by filling it with marguerites. Myosotis can be planted along the edges of the benches and, if there are any posts, run a few sweet peas up them.

NATIONAL SWEET PEA SOCIETY.

The National Sweet Pea Society of America will hold its annual convention and summer exhibition at Philadelphia, June 23 and 24, 1911, under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society and in connection with its annual sweet pea exhibition.

A guarantee fund for a general list of prizes has been headed by our president, W. Atlee Burpee, the Henry F.

Michell Co., Henry A. Dreer, Inc., Arthur T. Boddington and other seed houses contributing. A preliminary schedule will be published in a few days, showing list of prizes, cups, etc., and a general program for the convention. Contributions for additional prizes in the form of cash or cups, etc., are invited from the trade.

The prize list will amount to about $500, which should act as a great stimulus to the lovers of sweet peas, and intending exhibitors should make due preparations for this, the third annual exhibition given by our society. For further particulars write to the undersigned at 342 West Fourteenth street, New York city.

THE CUT FLOWER CROP.

Growth is now rapid under glass, and, unless the plants are looked over frequently, there is a danger of the haulm becoming bent, which will spoil the flowering stems for sale purposes. With increasing sun heat, the beds dry out more quickly and water supplies must be increased. March and April are the two months when sweet peas under glass reach their greatest perfection. When the early summer torrid waves arrive, they rapidly deteriorate in quality. They are naturally cool, moisture-loving subjects and no attempt should ever be made to force or coddle them. Plants flowering should be supplied with liquid manure once a week, or in place of this have a top-dressing of cow or sheep manure hoed in before watering. Keep the ventilators open whenever the weather will permit, and there are few days after April comes in when they cannot be opened for at least a few hours daily. A night temperature of 50 degrees will be about right. This can be advanced 2 or 3 degrees as the month progresses. The Spencer varieties are now starting to flower and from this time on will command the best prices. Out of the numerous varieties now listed, the original Countess Spencer remains at the head of the procession as a seller.

As the outdoor sweet peas come through the ground, run the cultivator freely among them, and where they have come up too thickly this is an opportune time to do necessary thinning. If strong haulm, which will carry stout flower stems, is wanted, the plants must be given ample room in which to develop. A row of plants thickly sown may look pleasing in the early stages of growth, but as the season advances these thick seedlings simply smother one another, stem-rot develops and the flower stalks, instead of carrying three and four flowers each, average half that number. Get supports into position as soon as possible.

Plants started in pots in a cold greenhouse or coldframes can go outdoors any time after the middle of April. Harden them off gradually first. Before setting them out place the supports in the rows and do not crowd the plants. A foot apart will prove more satisfactory than half that distance; that is, if the little pots contain an average of three plants each.

Marguerite plants which are grown for cutting should now have the pots or boxes stood on the beds or benches, so that they can root through freely, and will, in addition, need lots of water and frequent feeding, or the stems will not have the length or the flowers the size we would like to see. Plants set out in narrow benches will now be coming to flower freely and should give a crop until the latter part of June. Marguerites as winter bloomers must have their root run restricted, but after the early spring they flower finely planted directly in the benches. Young stock, both yellow and white varieties, could have the flowers pinched off. These should be carried over summer in a cold house or frame, and if they do not have shade from laths to keep them cooler, they will summer much better, especially the yellow varieties. Marguerites are being more grown every year and sell as well as any flower on the market, and the grower who may have a house not quite adapted for ear-nation or rose culture may turn it to good advantage by filling it with marguerites. Myosotis can be planted along the edges of the benches and, if there are any posts, run a few sweet peas up them.

NATIONAL SWEET PEA SOCIETY.

The National Sweet Pea Society of America will hold its annual convention and summer exhibition at Philadelphia, June 23 and 24, 1911, under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society and in connection with its annual sweet pea exhibition.

A guarantee fund for a general list of prizes has been headed by our president, W. Atlee Burpee, the Henry F.

Michell Co., Henry A. Dreer, Inc., Arthur T. Boddington and other seed houses contributing. A preliminary schedule will be published in a few days, showing list of prizes, cups, etc., and a general program for the convention. Contributions for additional prizes in the form of cash or cups, etc., are invited from the trade.

The prize list will amount to about $500, which should act as a great stimulus to the lovers of sweet peas, and intending exhibitors should make due preparations for this, the third annual exhibition given by our society. For further particulars write to the undersigned at 342 West Fourteenth street, New York city.

THE CUT FLOWER CROP.

Growth is now rapid under glass, and, unless the plants are looked over frequently, there is a danger of the haulm becoming bent, which will spoil the flowering stems for sale purposes. With increasing sun heat, the beds dry out more quickly and water supplies must be increased. March and April are the two months when sweet peas under glass reach their greatest perfection. When the early summer torrid waves arrive, they rapidly deteriorate in quality. They are naturally cool, moisture-loving subjects and no attempt should ever be made to force or coddle them. Plants flowering should be supplied with liquid manure once a week, or in place of this have a top dressing of cow or sheep manure hoed in before watering. Keep the ventilators open whenever the weather will permit, and there are few days after April comes in when they cannot be opened for at least a few hours daily. A night temperature of 50 degrees will be about right. This can be advanced 2 or 3 degrees as the month progresses. The Spencer varieties are now starting to flower and from this time on will command the best prices. Out of the numerous varieties now listed, the original Countess Spencer remains at the head of the procession as a seller.

As the outdoor sweet peas come through the ground, run the cultivator freely among them, and where they have come up too thickly this is an opportune time to do necessary thinning. If strong haulm, which will carry stout flower stems, is wanted, the plants must be given ample room in which to develop. A row of plants thickly sown may look pleasing in the early stages of growth, but as the season advances these thick seedlings simply smother one another, stem rot develops and the flower stalks, instead of carrying three and four flowers each, average half that number. Get supports into position as soon as possible.

Plants started in pots in a cold greenhouse or coldframes can go outdoors any time after the middle of April. Harden them off gradually first. Before setting them out place the supports in the rows and do not crowd the plants. A foot apart will prove more satisfactory than half that distance; that is, if the little pots contain an average of three plants each.

IN FAR ALBERTA.

Probably the average florist, if he knows where Alberta is to be found on the map, mentally regards it as next door to the jumping-off place, but the fact is that many a prosperous florist is to be found in this western province of Canada. At Lethbridge, on a branch of the Canadian Pacific railroad, Frache Bros. made a start in 1910. The accompanying illustration shows their establishment. It consists of two houses, one 32x140 and the other 32x200. Carnations are the only cut flowers that are grown. Ferns, smilax, lettuce and tomatoes, the latter during the summer season only, occupy the balance of the space. The houses are of semi-iron construction, with concrete walls and concrete benches, iron purlins and iron purlin supports. The houses are heated with steam carried at a fairly high pressure in the boiler and regulated by a pressure reducing valve to the desired low pressure carried on the coils. The condensation is taken care of by automatic return traps, and altogether the plant is strictly up-to-date. Business has been good ever since the houses were completed, and an early addition to the range is anticipated.

pot firmly. Loosely potted plants are never a success.

Geraniums are not usually troubled with any disease if soil and other conditions are to their liking. Never coddle them; 45 to 50 degrees at night is warm enough. Do not treat them as semi-aquatics, but let them dry out well between waterings. Do not make a habit of playing the hose on the foliage. They do not need it and if you have some poor glass, scalding may be the outcome. Ventilate freely and never let your house have a close, stuffy feeling, as such conditions are exactly what geraniums dislike. Pick off all the badly affected leaves. Give as much space as possible. Pick over weekly, and any which may have a starved look will be improved by a weak dose of nitrate of soda water. C. W.

CUTTINGS.Making and Rooting.

Cuttings may be made of leaves, shoots, branches or roots, but for the purposes of these notes I shall only deal with the cuttings of soft-wooded plants and those which are to some extent hardy, the whole subject being large enough for a small book. The time and manner of taking cuttings, the kind of parents they are taken from, the material in which they are placed, the treatment to be given them afterward, and many other details are so varied that I can do no more here than mention a few general principles upon which success in rearing cuttings rests, says Alger Petts in an article in the Gardeners' Magazine.

First, as to the best kinds of material for cuttings. When a piece of zonal pelargonium, for instance, is separated from the parent plant, if the cutting, as it now becomes, is put into a suitable medium, a thickening, or callus, is formed along the cut edge, and from this roots are subsequently emitted. If the shoot had remained on the plant the leaves would have continued elaborating plant food for use in the formation of new tissue in all parts of the plant, including the roots. As tissue-forming material cannot get down to the roots of a new cutting, it gets as far as it can—the cut end—and there accumulates.

The Right Cuttings.

The cutting selected, then, must have enough inherent energy not only to maintain itself while it is without roots, but also to form roots; in other words, the substance of the cutting must contain a sufficient proportion of solid matter, with leaves in the full vigor of plant life. It is obvious that if a shoot is not in a condition to make fair growth while on the plant, it will not be able to grow and form roots in addition when made into a

Geraniums

BEDDING STOCK.

With Easter flowering plants out of the way, it is now possible to give the geraniums the space which they have sorely needed for some weeks. All of them, unless late propagated, should be in 4-inch pots. The latest batch should not go beyond 3-inch. They will not retail for as much as the larger ones, but even if customers are not found for them all they will come in useful to plant out for stock. When spreading out the plants, pick them over and remove any weeds. If any, perchance, have a slimy surface, scratch them over. This sometimes happens, although it should not if the plants were properly watered. If any of the earliest potted batch are showing signs of starvation, a light top-dressing of fine bone mixed with loam, or a watering with nitrate of soda or weak cow manure, will tone them up. A pinch of Clay's fertilizer will also have a magical effect on such plants. It can be safely applied once in ten days, either in liquid form or as a top-dressing.

After the middle of April it is perfectly safe to place a quantity of the largest geraniums in frames. If a few inches of warm manure and leaves are moistened, well mixed and tramped firmly, and if a layer of fine ashes three to four inches thick is spread over this and the geranium pots partially plunged, you will be surprised to note how well they thrive. Greenhouse space is valuable until Memorial day is past and the coldframes make a valuable overflow, which can now be fully appreciated. Some covering will still be needed on cold nights, but ventilation can be freely afforded on all pleasant days.

Unless there is a demand for plants early in the season, it is better to keep the flower trusses picked off until towards the end of April.

Some growers make quite a little business in geraniums at Easter and there is every reason why they should be more used at this festival. They are something people of moderate means want and can easily grow and nice 4-inch pots carrying a good truss each should sell, especially if the varieties are up-to-date and embrace the most popular shades of color.

GERANIUM FOLIAGE SCALDED.

Can you tell me what is the trouble with my geraniums, of which I send some leaves? The trouble started last January near the heater and on a level near the top and I thought some hot water must have come from overhead and scalded the leaves. About a week or two ago the trouble got much worse and I risked spreading it by moving the plants and it is a little better. Callas, where the geraniums stood, now have their leaves badly spotted. Can you tell me what causes this? J. F. T.

A number of the leaves had a much scalded appearance and the mere fact that callas placed where the geraniums had been growing were similarly affected, would go to show that hot water was the probable cause of the scalding. The spots on some of the leaves (in batch No. 2) may have been caused by a sun scald, due to inferior glass, or may have been induced to some extent by growing the plants soft and warm and keeping the atmosphere too damp and stuffy. The compost, too, has to be taken into consideration. If you have used much decayed manure in your soil, it promotes a rank and soft growth, which falls an easy prey to disease. On the other hand, by using little manure and that old and well decayed, and some fine bone at the rate of a 4-inch pot to each bushel of soil, you will promote a firm growth which will give you short-jointed wood, which will flower freely. Then again, you should always cutting, and this bars the taking of any shoot with a flower or flower bud at the tip, as the growth of such a shoot has already nearly reached its natural limit. On the other hand, plants that have been growing rankly will not be able to maintain themselves when suddenly cut off from the liberal supply of nourishment to which they have been accustomed. Plants grown in the shade, with, perhaps, in addition an excess of moisture, will provide watery shoots with little of the solid substance necessary to the formation of roots.

The ideal material, then, for making into cuttings must not be too watery or too rank in growth, but should possess the maximum of solid substance in itself consistent with the possession of leaves with their vital functions unimpaired by age.

The Right Preparation.

Then as to the preparation of the cuttings. From what has been said above, it will be seen that if the cutting is too long, or the leaves too large, failure will result from excessive transpiration, while if the cutting is too small the formation of roots will be slow. What is a long cutting for plants with slender laterals, like the antirrhinum, is short for thick growth like that of the zonal pelargonium. The shoots should always be cut straight across just below a joint, and this should be done with a sharp knife, as a smooth cut heals over much more quickly than a ragged edge.

Many plants lend themselves to the taking of laterals as cuttings with a heel attached, and such cuttings need little preparation beyond the removal of the lower leaves close to the stem, and possibly a trimming of the heel. In the fuchsia it is usual to remove two large leaves and perhaps two small ones, but in the pentstemon sometimes as many as six or eight.

An interesting point was raised by Professor George Henslow, in a paper read before the Royal Horticultural Society in June, 1908, on "The Absorption of Rain and Dew by the Green Parts of Plants." He referred to a German scientist, who, in accord with his theory that the frequent fading of cuttings before they have struck root is to be accounted for by the fact that the transpiration from the exposed leaves is greater than the amount of water which the cut end can supply, recommends that the cutting should be longer than usual, and that some of the leaves should be buried to assist in the absorption of water. It is claimed that cuttings of roses, pinks, and others usually not easy to strike, will make good roots in this way if the soil is porous enough to permit of the free access of air to encourage the formation of roots before the leaves have time to decay. This is a case where each may experiment for himself, but it is certainly suggestive.

The Right Time.

The time for taking cuttings is too various to admit even of generalization, there being no time of the year which is not the best time for some plants, as we take chrysanthemum cuttings from November to March, most things in the spring, carnations and pelargoniums in the summer, calceolarias and pentstemons in the autumn. Many plants will strike at any time of the year, though there is a best time for most, and experience is the best teacher. As a rule, however, most soft-wooded plants strike well in the spring.

The compost in which cuttings are put is in many cases important, though some will strike freely enough in the ordinary soil of the border. Silver sand is one of the best mediums for most plants, not only for mixing with the soil, but for putting round each cutting, as, being free from animal matter, it delays putrefac-tion, and, by reason of its fineness, assists in the rise of water to the base of the cutting, besides filling up every interstice so that there is no likelihood of the cut end being suspended clear of contact—a fatal error.

Pots should be filled half-full of clean potsherds, and rough material put over these. If the soil is dry it should be well soaked and left for some time before the cuttings are put in it. Many cuttings do best when inserted round the sides of a pot, though others do equally well in any part.

Later Treatment.

There is one point about the after treatment which is of general application, and that is that the cuttings should not be allowed to flag more than can be helped. To compensate for the diminished power of absorbing moisture on the part of the cuttings, we usually keep them in a moist atmosphere, often, indeed, within a propagating frame inside a greenhouse.

There is an immense difference in the amount of moisture which cuttings of different kinds of plants will stand, and a degree which is necessary to some will cause others to damp off rapidly, but the liability to do this is lessened in all cases by a proper airing at least once a day. This applies also when bell glasses are used, as these, when pressed tightly down on the soil, are almost air-proof. The air in these is consequently maintained in a very close state, and cuttings of many plants can be successfully raised under them. Some need bottom heat, so that not only the air, but the soil in which the cuttings are put, is kept warm, thus accelerating the formation of roots. Most need shading from the direct rays of the sun, but an almost full amount of diffused sunshine is beneficial as a rule. If the weather is cool, water should be applied very sparingly, and then only enough to wet the leaves, which is usually sufficient so long as the soil is moist about the base of the cuttings.

THE MAIL ORDER PLANT TRADE.

This is proving an exceptionally heavy season for the plant department of the Iowa Seed Co., Des Moines. They frequently fill from 600 to 1,000 plant orders per day, but one day last week they filled and packed for shipment by mail or express 1,400 plant orders. What that means during freezing weather every plant shipper will appreciate. A

EASTER TABLES.

For a Long Banquet Table.

The egg and duckling decoration, as already described in my article on "Easter Windows," may be easily adapted to a table decoration. If for a long banquet table, have a number of eggs scattered along on the table, mounted in the same way and not over six or eight inches high. Use the pussy willows or fruit blossoms between. The smaller eggs will be much more easily made of marguerites, the white outside and the yellow inside, or they would be daintily made of light blue and white pansies. Smaller eggs still may be used, one at each plate, and a duckling or chick, either within the shell or standing beside it.

A breakfast or luncheon decoration of sweet peas can be arranged by filling blown egg shells with sweet peas, one at each place.

A Pansy Luncheon.

For a pansy luncheon, the whole center space of the table may be arranged in the form of a solid pansy bed in several sections. Use the blooming plants as a background. Enrich by adding many cut blooms, stemmed. Any color scheme obtainable may be worked out—purple and lavender, brown and yellow, white and blue, or all of these colors carefully blended. Eggs and ducklings, or chicks with full-blown roses, preferably pink, are scattered loosely over the pansy bed. The poses of the birds will have much to do with the effectiveness of the decoration. They may be perched on a stem, peeping into a rose, nestled in a group of flowers, etc. A bed of crocus or violets, arranged in the same way, would be an equally attractive decoration.

To Avoid Repetition.

Some toy rabbits frolicking through a bed of tulips or narcissi, with here and there a broken stem and a flower lying flat, will take with people who are much entertained. Quite often one florist gets the bulk of the trade of all the members of one social set, and his centerpieces should not be repeated often. The more novelties and changes he can introduce, the better. Seeing certain society announcements, he can plan and be ready for milady, giving her something new and planned especially for her. AN AUSTRALIAN CLOCK DESIGN.

One of the standard funeral designs in the United States is that which includes the clock dial, marking the passage of time or the end of life. It therefore is interesting to note the same design as used in far-off Australia. The illustration in this issue, in which the dial appears, is reproduced from a photograph made at Sydney at the time of the obsequies for the late King Edward. Searl & Sons were too far from

The King's Clock.

London to have orders for flowers for the funeral, but they arranged their window as a memorial window for the occasion. The clock was the centerpiece of the display.

Review readers will be quick to note that the style is considerably more open than in the American "clocks." We make them with more flowers. Perhaps our method may use up more stock, but it is doubtful if it results in any other good purpose. Considering that this design was made merely for display in a store window, there is no criticism of the somewhat unusual amount of lettering. As a rule, the inscription should be kept down to the fewest possible words, but it nevertheless is a fact that the design-maker often finds himself at his wits' end to locate appropriately all the lettering he is required to put on some piece of insignificant size. In the present instance design and lettering are in harmony. The space at the top seems to have been specially designed for the words "With His King," and the field at the base, bearing the words "The Long Day Closes," would necessarily have been made up with loosely arranged cut flowers had it not been for the lettering that was to fill the space. The card at the bottom is not a part of the design. The words, "Time, like an ever rolling stream, bears all its sons away," were merely a part of the general scheme of the memorial window.

RETAILERS' ADVERTISING.

The Review has from time to time reproduced a number of the advertisements which have been published in their local papers by florists both in the large cities and in country towns. It is not always the man who has the largest business who does the best advertising, but it may be taken as a fact that the man who does the best advertising steadily is forging to the front, for the one whose advertising shows that he gives it thought is pretty sure also to give thought to the other details of his business and may be trusted to give attention to an order.

The reproduction of these advertisements has afforded an idea to many readers, for they are largely utilized in the construction of advertisements for others than the original advertiser. There can be no harm in a florist in Iowa using an idea gleaned from an advertisement published by one in Connecticut. In fact, it is by adapting and developing the ideas of others that the best advertisements usually are produced.

Good display is an important factor in any advertisement. If you are not sure of what you want in the line of display, give your idea to your local newspaper man and let him work it up for the printers. If he is at all up to date he will make your interests his interests and get up something for you which will make an attractive showing.

As to what to put into an advertisement, opinions are as different as the men who hold them. There is no question of the virtue in a brief argument as to your superior facilities, but if you notice what advertisers in other lines are doing you will see that the largest advertisers invariably quote prices.

photographer was called in during the big day and made the picture in the packing shed reproduced on page 13. The shed is 185 feet long and there is a row of greenhouses leading from it on each side, affording every convenience for the handling of the shipping. Charles N. Page, president of the concern, says that they have this season sent plant orders to Hawaii, Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, England, British Columbia, Mexico, Guatemala, Panama, New Zealand, South Africa, Peru, Jamaica, Honduras and the Bahama Islands, besides every state in the Union. Forty-four persons are employed in the greenhouses, most of whom are shown in the second of the accompanying illustrations. Mr. Page stands at the left of the line.

EASTER TABLES.

For a Long Banquet Table.

The egg and duckling decoration, as already described in my article on "Easter Windows," may be easily adapted to a table decoration. If for a long banquet table, have a number of eggs scattered along on the table, mounted in the same way and not over six or eight inches high. Use the pussy willows or fruit blossoms between. The smaller eggs will be much more easily made of marguerites, the white outside and the yellow inside, or they would be daintily made of light blue and white pansies. Smaller eggs still may be used, one at each plate, and a duckling or chick, either within the shell or standing beside it.

A breakfast or luncheon decoration of sweet peas can be arranged by filling blown egg shells with sweet peas, one at each place.

A Pansy Luncheon.

For a pansy luncheon, the whole center space of the table may be arranged in the form of a solid pansy bed in several sections. Use the blooming plants as a background. Enrich by adding many cut blooms, stemmed. Any color scheme obtainable may be worked out—purple and lavender, brown and yellow, white and blue, or all of these colors carefully blended. Eggs and ducklings, or chicks with full-blown roses, preferably pink, are scattered loosely over the pansy bed. The poses of the birds will have much to do with the effectiveness of the decoration. They may be perched on a stem, peeping into a rose, nestled in a group of flowers, etc. A bed of crocus or violets, arranged in the same way, would be an equally attractive decoration.

To Avoid Repetition.

Some toy rabbits frolicking through a bed of tulips or narcissi, with here and there a broken stem and a flower lying flat, will take with people who are much entertained. Quite often one florist gets the bulk of the trade of all the members of one social set, and his centerpieces should not be repeated often. The more novelties and changes he can introduce, the better. Seeing certain society announcements, he can plan and be ready for milady, giving her something new and planned especially for her. Gertrude Blair.

AN AUSTRALIAN CLOCK DESIGN.

One of the standard funeral designs in the United States is that which includes the clock dial, marking the passage of time or the end of life. It therefore is interesting to note the same design as used in far-off Australia. The illustration in this issue, in which the dial appears, is reproduced from a photograph made at Sydney at the time of the obsequies for the late King Edward. Searl & Sons were too far from

The King's Clock.

London to have orders for flowers for the funeral, but they arranged their window as a memorial window for the occasion. The clock was the centerpiece of the display.

Review readers will be quick to note that the style is considerably more open than in the American "clocks." We make them with more flowers. Perhaps our method may use up more stock, but it is doubtful if it results in any other good purpose. Considering that the design was made merely for display in a store window, there is no criticism of the somewhat unusual amount of lettering. As a rule, the inscription should be kept down to the fewest possible words, but it nevertheless is a fact that the design-maker often finds himself at his wits' end to locate appropriately all the lettering he is required to put on some piece of insignificant size. In the present instance design and lettering are in harmony. The space at the top seems to have been specially designed for the word "With His King," and the field at the base, bearing the words "The Long Day Closes," would necessarily have been made up with loosely arranged cut flowers had it not been for the lettering that was to fill the space. The card at the bottom is not a part of the design. The words, "Time, like an ever-rolling stream, bears all its sons away," were merely a part of the general scheme of the memorial window.

RETAILERS' ADVERTISING.

The Review has from time to time reproduced a number of the advertisements which have been published in their local papers by florists both in the large cities and in country towns. It is not always the man who has the largest business who does the best advertising, but it may be taken as a fact that the man who does the best advertising steadily is forging to the front, for the one whose advertising shows that he gives it thought is pretty sure also to give thought to the other details of his business and may be trusted to give attention to an order.

The reproduction of these advertisements has afforded an idea to many readers, for they are largely utilized in the construction of advertisements for others than the original advertiser. There can be no harm in a florist in Iowa using an idea gleaned from an advertisement published by one in Connecticut. In fact, it is by adapting and developing the ideas of others that the best advertisements usually are produced.

Good display is an important factor in any advertisement. If you are not sure of what you want in the line of display, give your idea to your local newspaper man and let him work it up for the printers. If he is at all up to date he will make your interests his interests and get up something for you which will make an attractive showing.

As to what to put into an advertisement, opinions are as different as the men who hold them. There is no question of the virtue in a brief argument as to your superior facilities, but if you notice what advertisers in other lines are doing you will see that the larger advertisers invariably quote prices.

Atlanta, Ga.—W. A. Hollingsworth formerly at 89 Peachtree street, has moved his store to 119 North Pry street, at the corner of Houston street.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The firm of K. S. Eckhardt Co. has been reorganized under the name of Henry Kusik & Co. The new firm has purchased Mr. Eckhardt's interest and he has withdrawn his connection.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

The dark and cool weather which prevailed last week shortened up receipts to such an extent that normal prices again reigned. It also kept stock in good shape, for the quality of cut flowers is fine, indeed. The supply of carnations and roses was equal to the demand, while valley, violets and bulbous stock were a little more plentiful. The only flowers in which a decided shortage is felt are American Beauties; even the Chicago market was of no help when this line of stock was called for. Wild smilax is also a thing of the past for this season. Common ferns braced up somewhat and now command $4 per thousand. The supply of Easter lilies, both plants and cut flowers, will be equal to the demand.

Various Notes.

At the club meeting, April 6, various topics of interest came up and created some enthusiasm. The entertainment committee was empowered to arrange for a May party sometime next month. Nic Zweifel entertained those present with a brief description of his trip to the Boston convention, plus the numerous side trips.

The Florists' Bowling League lost the final match with the Odahnas, which was rolled at Sonnenberg's, on Third street, April 7. Thus the florists lost two out of three games. According to present plans, the local boys will journey to Chicago May 7 to roll the return game. Anyone desiring to be in it (for all are welcome), kindly inform Gust Rusch, care of Holton & Hunkel Co., who is the man in charge.

William Currie, C. C. Pollworth and Nic Zweifel, who attended the Boston convention, returned last week. They state it was the finest and largest show this country ever had, and a credit, indeed, to those who helped make it such.

The G. H. Hunkel Co. reports a heavy call for plumosus seed of late. Mail order trade is fully up to last year.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. cleaned up on Perle roses on Palm Sunday, owing to the confirmation exercises in the various churches. The firm's plants and cut stock for Easter are all in prime condition.

At the greenhouses of the Holton & Hunkel Co. they have been busy as bees shipping plants for the Easter trade in all directions. At the time of writing all the best stock is spoken for.

The Fox Point Floral Co., which forces a large batch of pot plants for Easter, reports being cleaned out, with the exception of a few spiræas, on Palm Sunday.

The Mueller & Schroeder Co. is cutting exceptionally fine snapdragons, which command a fancy price. This firm's carnations, too, are in fine shape.

Roy Currie, of the Currie Bros. Co., says the firm sold an exceptionally large number of plants on the Saturday preceding Palm Sunday.

If business keeps up the pace it set the first day of this week, the Edlefsen-Leidiger Co. can be more than satisfied.

Christ Peterson, lately from Chicago, has opened a stand for the sale of pot plants at 53 Martin street.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Palm Sunday made a unique spring record. Early risers found the earth completely covered with winter's snowy mantle. The warm sun of Monday melted this final reminder of winter and rapidly rising temperature gives hope of the real advent of spring. The plantmen especially hope to avoid the extra trouble and expense of wrapping.

Prices of cut flowers are steady, and the improvement gradual. There will be enough of everything. For years "plant Easters" have been the fashion. The chances are about even again this year for both branches of the trade and plants and cut flowers will vie equally for public recognition. The week opens encouragingly. There is no surplus. The left-over stock of last week cleaned up rapidly. Beauties fell to 30 cents April 8. There seems to be an abundance of every variety of roses. If values rise twenty-five per cent above Monday's prices for Saturday, it is generally believed that this will be the limit. White carnations rose to 3 cents April 10. All varieties are abundant and quality is generally perfect; 4 to 5 cents will likely be the top quotation for Easter. Fine cattleyas sold at 75 cents and even $1 was paid for the best of them. A goodly variety of orchids are arriving and all of the best wholesale houses will have their share for distribution. The shipping demand is increasing all the time, keeping pace with the more numerous and larger sources of supply.

There will be plenty of lilies, and 12 cents seems to be the top quotation in pots, and 8 to 10 cents for the cut lilies, at which figure most of the preliminary booking has been made. Callas are holding at about the same figures and valley is steady at 3 cents for the high grade, with much inferior stock selling as low as $1 per hundred. There are oceans of sweet peas, violets and daffodils. The best violets will be scarce, the experts say, but of the medium grade there will be enough and to spare. Bulbous stock, especially tulips, is a drag, and hard to move at any figure.

Club Meeting.

The meeting of the Florists' Club, April 10, was of exceptional interest. Routine was quickly dispatched. The dinner, reception, transportation and legislative committees made reports and were thanked, as were the donors of stock for the annual dinner decoration and Alex. McConnell for his decorative work. Robert Young reported all arrangements complete for the club's outing June 28. Resolutions on the deaths of Mr. Kessler, Mr. Pioroski and George Lorenz were ordered. L. W. C. Tuthill was elected to membership and M. H. Duryea, Joseph Roberts and James Fisher were proposed.

Exhibits of the evening included: Calla Elliottiana, from John Lewis Childs, of Flowerfield, L. I., was awarded the thanks of the club. Carnation Wodenethe, shown by Mr. Whitney, was given the thanks of the club, having previously been exhibited by C. H. Totty, the disseminator. Harry A. Bunyard, general manager for Arthur T. Boddington, staged a splendid collection of sweet peas, flowered from his firm's seed by William Sim, of Cliftondale, Mass. Twenty-one varieties in many colors were included and a cultural certificate was awarded.

F. R. Pierson gave an interesting address on the National Flower Show. He said the total expenditure amounted to about $25,000, over $8,000 in premiums being awarded, but the admissions were over $19,000, and he assured those on the guarantee list that they will not only get their money back, but a dividend in addition. C. B. Weathered spoke of the many courtesies the New York visitors to the show had received and J. H. Pepper showed some views of the exhibition.

Arthur Cowee, of Berlin, N. Y., gave a most interesting address on the gladiolus, illustrating his talks with colored stereopticon views. He was enthusiastically cheered.

The house committee, Messrs. Fenrich and Rickards officiating, provided most appetizing refreshments and it is difficult to understand why only one-third the club's membership attends these delightful monthly reunions. Among those present this evening were C. S. Lord, Minneapolis, and Fred Lautenschlager, Chicago.

Various Notes.

This will be the busiest auction week of the year. Extra sales are announced and the Fruit Auction Co. is offering stock every day, with John P. Cleary on the rostrum. Prices are at high tide, hardy roses selling at from 9 cents to 30 cents each. The crowds at Elliott's and MacNiff's are double those of last year, mostly made up of suburban buyers. Easter flowering plants are the principal offerings this week.

Of the better grade of plants the big growers announce nothing left. The advance orders have been enormous.

John F. Sharkey died April 6 at his residence, 102 West Forty-eighth street, and the funeral services on Sunday were attended by many of his florist friends. He leaves a wife and son.

J. J. Fellouris will move, May 1, to larger and more convenient quarters at 116 West Twenty-eighth street.

J. W. Merritt, of Brooklyn, has moved his florists' supply establishment to the ground floor at 386 Pearl street, where he has abundance of room and facilities for a large business.

The large dailies carry quite extensive advertisements of Easter stock, many of the large department stores making their floral displays a special feature. Trepel has this department in three of these stores under his management, and his aggregate purchases will amount to many thousands of dollars.

Russin & Hanfling say they will be open all of Saturday night. All the supply houses will doubtless concede this opportunity to their patrons, and every cut flower establishment will keep open house, as usual.

J. K. Allen says that during the last week he has averaged receipts of 500 Brunners daily.

J. Houck, of Bloomfield, N. J., is building 10,000 square feet additional to his greenhouse plant and installing a No. 14 Kroeschell boiler. This will make his total close to 40,000 square feet. He is a member of the Growers' Cut Flower Co., 111 West Twenty-eighth street.

Mrs. Krick has a handsome store at 1379 Broadway, Brooklyn, close to the locality of the old store and business that was established by the firm in 1852. The trade welcomes her back to the fold.

Secretary Eagleson, of the American Institute, announces the fall dahlia show for September 19 to 21, and the mum show November 1 to 3.

A. T. Boddington gave a farewell luncheon to the English visitors on the eve of their departure for home April 4. These gentlemen were greatly pleased with their reception by the trade everywhere they went and were unanimous in declaring they had had the time of their lives.

April 12 the Horticultural Society of New York had an Easter plant and flower exhibition at the Museum of Natural History. J. Austin Shaw.

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

With the approach of Easter the flower stores and many nurseries are filled with all kinds of flowering plants, especially lilies, and although the lateness of this festival this year makes a large sale of plants and cut flowers somewhat doubtful, a generally optimistic view is prevailing. Easter lilies, the predominant plants for the occasion, are not quite as plentiful as in former years, but those on hand are of a good quality, especially the ones grown from Louisiana bulbs. Spiraea Japonica, both white and pink, are much less grown than in former years and, with the majority of the growers, have finished blooming. What is still on hand should find a ready sale and bring a good price.

Rhododendrons, lilacs and hydrangeas are scarce, as also is Azalea mollis, and every one of these plants on hand will surely go in a rush. The usual amount of lily of the valley is forced by the various florists, and the market gardeners will bring in their usual supply of small sized flowering plants of many varieties. Since the last month the sale of outdoor plants has increased considerably, and the frequent, heavy rains we have had of late helped the outdoor stock along a good deal. For two weeks the first gladioli, both light and dark colors, have been in the market. Spanish iris has had a short season and hardly any are to be cut now. The same can be said of sweet peas; in fact, outdoor flowers are at present exceedingly scarce. Asters are planted by many florists in greater quantities than in former years; so are single tuberose, and both of these furnish valuable summer cut flowers for different uses.

Many large orders for wedding decorations after Easter have been booked with several of our leading florists, and the different social functions following the dull lenten season will be gladly welcomed by all the florists.

Various Notes.

Abele Bros. have a nice lot of white hydrangeas in bloom. Their enlarged grounds are constantly restocked with all kinds of commercial shipping plants. They report the present season the best they have known in the last five years.

Doescher & Jones, a young and enterprising firm, have a fine and healthy stock of different varieties of nephrolepis of all sizes, besides a large collection of outdoor plants for shipping.

C. W. Eichling's Easter plants are in time. He has a well grown lot of lilies and spiraeas, besides his usual fine lily of the valley.

The Metairie Ridge Nursery Co. has a large and elegant stock of Easter lilies (giganteum and longiflorum), also gloxinias, bougainvilleas, Spiraea Japonica, in white and pink varieties, and valley, besides a fine collection of foliage plants. The four large rose houses are still furnishing a constant supply of fine blooms, as well as thousands of cuttings to grow their own stock and for the shipping trade.
